ball. Whence perhaps all the other sense.We will have in our rackets to these balls,
We will dance play a set,
Shall make his ladies crown into the hazard.The body, into which impression is made, either can yield backward or it cannot. If it can yield backward, then the impression made is a motion;
as we see a stroke with a racket upon a ball, makes it fly from it. *Dryden on the Seal*He talks much of the motives to do and forbear, how they determine a reasonable man, as if he were no more than a tennis-ball, to be tossed to and fro by the rackets of the second cause.

Bramhall against Hobbes.

RACKING. n. f.Racking pace of a horse is the same as an amble,

A glory surpassing the sun in its greatest radiance. Burnet.

RADIANT. adj. [radians, Latin.] Shining; brightly sparkling; emitting rays.

There was a sun of gold radiant upon the top, and before, a small cherub of gold with wings, displayed. Bacon.

Mark what radiant state she spreads,
In circle round her shining throne,
Shooting her beams like silver threads,
Thus, this is the alone. Milton's Arcades.

Virtue could see to do what virtue would

By her own radiant light, though sun and moon

Were in the flat sea sunk. Milton.

I see the warlike host of heaven,

Radiant in glit'ring arms and beamy pride,

Go forth to succour truth below. Milton.

TO RADIATE. v. n. [radio, Lat.] To emit rays; to shine; to sparkle.

Though with wit and parts their possiblers could never engage God to send forth his light and his truth: yet now that revelation hath disclosed them, and that he hath been pleased to make them radiant in his word, men may recollect those scattered divine beams, and kindling with them the ticklers proper to warm our affections enflame holy zeal. Boyle.

Light radiates from luminous bodies directly to our eyes, and thus we see the sun or a flame, or it is reflected from other bodies, and thus we see a man or a picture. Locke.

RADIATED. adj. [radiatus, Lat.] Adorned with rays.

The radiant head of the phoenix gives us the meaning of a passage in Aunianus. Addison.

RADIATION. n. s. [radiatio, Latin; radiation, French.]

1. Beamy lustre; emission of rays.

We have perspective house, where we make demonstrations of all lights and radiations, and of all colours. Bacon.

Should I say I liv'd darker than were true,
Your radiation can all clouds subdue,
But one; 'tis best light to contemplate you. Denn.

2. Emission from a centre every way.

Sound parallelith in many things with the light, and radiation of things visible. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

RADICAL. adj. [radical, French; from radix, Latin.]

1. Primitive; original.

The differences, which are secondary, and proceed from these radical differences, are, plants are all figurate and determinate, which inanimate bodies are not. Bacon.

Such a radical truth, that God is, springing up together with the essence of the soul, and previous to all other thoughts, is not pretended to by religion. Bentley.

2. Implanted by nature.

The emission of the loose and adventitious moisture doth betray the radical moisture, and carrieth it for company. Bacon.

If the radical moisture of gold were separated, it might be contrived to burn without being consumed. Wilkins.

The sun beams render the humours hot, and dry up the radical moisture. Aschmole.

3. Serving to origination.

RADICALITY. n. s. [from radical.] Origination.

There may be equivocal seeds and hermaphroditical principles, that contain the radicality and power of different forms; thus, in the seeds of wheat, there lieth obscurely the femininity of dandelion. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

RADICALLY. adv. [from radical.] Originally; primitively.

It is no easy matter to determine the point of death in insects, who have not their vitalities radically confined unto one part. Brown's Vulg. Err.

These great orbs thus radically bright,

Primitive founts, and origins of light,

Unliven worlds deny'd to human sight. Prior.

RADICALNESS. n. s. [from radical.] The state of being radical.

TO RADICATE. v. a. [radicatus, from radix, Lat.] To root; to plant deeply and firmly.

Meditation will radicate these seeds, fix the transient gleam of light and warmth, confirm resolutions of good, and give them a durable confidence in the soul. Hanmerud.

Nor have we let fall our pen upon discouragement of unbelief; from radicating beliefs, and points of high prescription. Brown.

If the object stays not on the sense, it makes not impression enough to be remembered; but if it be repeated thrice, it leaves plenty enough of those images behind it, to strengthen the knowledge of the object; in which radicated knowledge, if the memory consist, there would be no need of rehearsing those atoms in the brain. Glanville's Defin.

RADICATION. n. s. [radication, French; from radicate] The act of taking root and fixing deep.

They that were to plant a church, were to deal with men of various inclination, and of different habits of sin, and degrees of radiation of those habits, and to each of these some proper application was to be made to cure their souls. Hanmerud.

RADICLE. n. s. [radicle, French; from radix, Latin.]

Radicle is that part of the seed of a plant, which, upon its vegetation, becomes its root. Quincy.

RADIUS. n. s. [Latin]

1. The semi-diameter of a circle.

2. A bone of the fore-arm, which accompanies the ulna from the elbow to the wrist.

TO RAFF. v. a. To sweep; to huddle; to take hastily without distinction.

Their causes and effects I thus raff up together. Carew.

TO RAFFLE. v. n. [raffler, to snatch, French.] To cast dice for a prize, for which every one lays down a stake.

Let us from Hampstead give me an account, there is a late institution there, under the name of a raffing shop. Tutler.

RAFFLE. n. s. [raffe, French; from the verb.] A species of game or lottery, in which many stake a small part of the value of some single thing, in consideration of a chance to gain it.

The ray, brought to Rome in the third triumph of Pompey, being a pair of tables for gaming, made of two precious stones, three foot broad, and four foot long, would have made a fine raff. Aschmole on Coins.

RAFT. n. s. [probably from ratis, Lat.] A frame or float made by laying pieces of timber cross each other.

Where is that son

That floated with thee on the fatal raft? Shaksp.

Fill the timber of yon lofty grove,

And form a raft, and build the rising ship. Pope.

RAFT. part. pass. of reave or raff. Spenser.

Torn; rent.

RAFTER. n. s. [ræfter, Saxon; rafter, Dutch; corrupted, says Junius, from roof tree.] The secondary timbers of the house; the timbers which are let into the great beam.

The rafters of my body, bone,

Being fill with you, the muscle, sinew, and vein,

Which tile this house, will come again. Donne.

Shepherd,

I trust thy honest offer'd courtesy,

Which oft is sooner found in lowly sheds

With smoky rafters, than in tap'ry halls. Milton.

On them the Trojans cast

Stones, rafters, pillars, beams. Denham.

By Doulos, king of Egypt, when he fled from his brother Rameles, the use of shipping was first brought among the Grecians, who before that time knew no other way of crossing their narrow seas, but on beams or rafters tied to one another. Heylyn.

From the East, a Belgian wind

His hostile breath through the dry rafters sent;

The flames impell'd. Dryden.

The roof began to mount aloft,

Aloft rose every beam and rafter,

The heavy wall climb'd slowly after. Swift's Misc.

RAFFERED. adj. [from rafter.] Built with rafters.

No raft red roofs with dance and tabor sound,

No noon tide bell invites the country round. Pope.

RAG. n. s. [rhacone, torn, Sax. cæc.]

1. A piece of cloth torn from the rest; a tatter.

Cowls, hoods, and habits, with their wearers torn,

And further'd into rags. Milton.

Rags are a great improvement of chalky lands. Murimor.

2. Any thing rent and tattered; worn out clothes: proverbially, mean dress.

Fathers that wear rags,

Do make their children blind;

But fathers that bear bags,

Shall see their children kind. Shaksp. King Lear.

They took from me

Both coat and cloake, and all things that might be

Grace in my habit; and in place, put on These tatter'd rags. Cleopman.

Worn like a cloth,

Gnaw'd into rags by the devouring moth. Sandys.

Content with poverty, my soul I am;

And virtue, though in rags, will keep me warm. Dryden.

3. A fragment of dress.

He had first matter seen undrest;

He took his rag all alone,

Before one rag of turn was on. Hudibras.

RAGAMUFFIN. n. s. [from rag and I know not what else.] A pithy mean fellow.

I have led my ragamuffins where they were perpet'd; there's not three of my hundred and fifty left alive; and they are for the town's end to beg during life. Shakspere's Henry IV.

Shall we brook that pithy als

And feeble founden, Hudibras,

With that more pithy ragamuffin,

Ralpho, vapouring and huffing? Hudibras.

Attended with a crew of ragamuffins, the broke into his house, turned all things topsy-turvy, and then set it on fire; Scout.

R A G

RAGE, n. f. [rage, French.]

1. Violent anger; vehement fury.
This tiger-footed rage, when it shall find
The harm of unkindness' swift, will, too late,
Tie leaden pounds to 's heels. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

Desire not
To allay my rages and revenges with Your colder reason. Shaksp. Titus Andronicus.

Arguement more herolick than the rage
Of Turnus for Lavinia disposs'd. Milton.
Torment and loud lament and furious rage.
Milton.

2. Vehemence or exacerbation of any thing painful.

The party hurt, who hath been in great rage of pain, till the weapon was re-annointed. Bacon.
The rage of thirst and hunger now suppress.
Pope.

3. Enthusiasm; rapture.

Who brought green poetry to her perfect age,
And made that art which was a rage. Cooley.

4. Eagerness; vehemence of mind; as,
A rage of money getting.

You purchase pain with all that joy can give,
And die of nothing but a rage to live. Pope.
Then may his soul its free-born rage enjoy,
Give deed to will, and every power employ. Harte.

To RAGE, v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To be in fury; to be heated with excessive anger.

Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging; and whoever is deceived thereby, is not wise. Prov.
Why do the heathen rage? Psalms ii. 1.
At this he only rag'd, and as they talk'd,
Smote him into the midriff. Milton.

2. To ravage; to exercise fury.

Heart-rending news,
That death should license have to rage among
The fair, the wife, the virtuous. Waller.

3. To act with mischievous impetuosity.

The chariots shall rage in the streets, they shall jostle one against another, seem like torches, and run like the lightnings. Nahum, ii. 4.
The madding wheels of braten chariots rag'd.
Milton.

After these waters had raged on the earth, they began to lessen and shrink, and the great fluctuations of this deep being quieted by degrees, the waters retired. Burnet.

RA'GEFUL, adj. [rage and full] Furious; violent.

This courtesy was worse than a ballad to Zelmene; so that again with rageful eyes she bad him defend himself; for no less than his life would answer it. Sidney.

A popular orator may represent vices in so mini-mable appearance, and set out each virtue in so amiable a form, that the covetous person shall scatter most liberally his beloved idol, wealth, and the rageful person shall find a calm. Hammond.

RA'GED, adj. [from rag.]

1. Rent into tatters.

How like a prodigal,
The scarfed bark puts from her native bay,
Hugg'd and embraced by the strumpet wind;
How like the prodigal doth she return
With over-weather'd ribs and ragged sails,
Lean, rent, and beggar'd by the trumpet wind.
Shaksp. Titus Andronicus.

As I go in this ragged watered coat, I am hunted away from the old woman's door by every barking
cur. Arbutnot.

2. Uneven; consisting of parts almost dis-united.

The earl of Warwick's ragged staff is yet to be seen portrayed in their church steeple. Carow.
That some whirlwind bear
Unto a ragged, fearful, hanging rock,
And throw it thence into the raging sea. Shaksp.

The moon appears, when looked upon with a good glass, rude and ragged. Barber.

3. Dressed in tatters.

Since noble arts in Rome have no support,
And ragged virtue not a friend at court. Dryden.
4. Rugged; not smooth.

The wolf would hatter away a ragged coat and a raw-boned carcass, for a smooth fat one. L'Eph.
What shepherd owns those ragged sheep? Dryden.

RA'GEDNESS, n. f. [from ragged.] State of being dressed in tatters.

Poor naked wretches, whoso'er you are,
That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm,
How shall your houseless heads and unfed sides,
Your loop'd and window'd raggedness defend you?
Shaksp. King Lear.

RA'GINOLY, adv. [from raging.] With vehement fury.

RA'GMAN, n. f. [rag and man.] One who deals in rags.

RAGOUT, n. f. [French.] Meat stewed and highly seasoned.

To the stage pernil
Ragouts for Tereus or Thyestes dress.
'Tis task enough for thee to expose a Roman feast.
Dryden.
No fish they reckon comparable to a ragout of snails. Addison.

When art and nature join, the ragout will be
Some nice ragouts, or charming fish. King.

RA'GWEAT, n. f. [rag and weat.] A plant.

RA'GSTONE, n. f. [rag and stone.]

1. A stone so named from its breaking in a ragged, uncertain, irregular manner.

Woodward on Fossils.

2. The stone with which they smooth the edge of a tool new-ground and left ragged.

RAIL, n. f. [riegel, German.]

1. A cross beam fixed at the ends in two upright posts.

If you make another square, and also a tennant on each untennanted end of the stiles, and another mortise on the top and bottom rails, you may put them together. Moxon.

2. A series of posts connected with beams, by which any thing is inclosed: a pale is a series of small upright posts rising above the cross beam, by which they are connected: a rail is a series of cross beams supported with posts, which do not rise much above it.

A man upon a high place without rail, is ready to fall. Bacon.

A large square table for the commissioners; one side being sufficient for those of either party, and a rail for others which wear round. Clarendon.

3. A kind of bird.

Of wild birds Cornwall hath quail, reil, partridge and pheasant. Carow's Survey of Cornwall.

4. [juggle, Saxon] A woman's upper garment. This is preserved only in the word night-rail.

To RAIL, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To enclose with rails.

The hand is square, with four rounds at the corners, this should first have been planched over,
and railed about with halflifters. Cowley.

As the churchyard ought to be divided from other prophane places, so it ought to be fenced in and railed. Aylmer.

Sir Roger has given a handsome pulpit-cloth, and railed in the communion-table. Addison.

2. To range in a line.

They were brought to London all railed in ropes, like a team of horses in a cart, and were executed
some at London, and the rest at divers places. Sp.

To RAIL, v. n. [railler, French; raill, Dutch.] To use insolent and reproachful language; to speak to, or to mention in opprobrious terms; formerly with an, now commonly with at.

Your husband is in his old law again; he so rails against all married mankind, curses all Eve's daughters. Shaksp. Titus Andronicus.

What a monstrous fellow art thou? thus to rail on one, that is neither known of thee, nor known thee. Shaksp. King Lear.

Till thou canst rail the seals from off my bond,
Thou but offend'st thy lungs to speak so loud.

He tript me behind, being down, insulted, rail'd. Shaksp. King Lear.

And put upon him such a deal of man,
That worthied him. Shaksp. King Lear.

Angels bring not railing accusation against them.
2 Peter, ii.

The plain the forest doth disdain:
The forests rail upon the plain. Drayton.

If any is angry, and rails at it, he may securely
Locke.

Thou art my blood, where Johnson has no part;
Where did his wit on learning fix a brand,
And rail at arts he did not understand? Dryden.

Letitia for ever on me rails,
To talk of me she never fails. Swift.

RAILIER, n. f. [from raill.] One who insults or defames by opprobrious language.

If I build my felicity upon my reputation, I am as happy as long as the railer will give me leave.
Saut's Sermons.

Let go presuming impious railer tax Creative wisdom. Thompson's Sermons.

RAILLERY, n. f. [raillerie, French.]
Slight satire; satirical merriment.

Let railery be without malice or heat. B. Jonson.
A quotation out of Hudibras shall make them treat with levity an obligation wherein their welfare is concerned as to this world and the next: railery of this nature is enough to make the hearer tremble. Addison's Freeholder.

Studies employed on low objects, the very naming of them is sufficient to turn them into railery. Addison.

To these we are solicited by the arguments of the subtle, and the raileries of the prophane.

Rign's Sermons.

RAI'MENT, n. f. [for arrament, from array.] Vesture; vestment; clothes; dress; garment. A word now little used but in poetry.

His raiment's, though mean, received handfome-ness by the grace of the wearer. Sidney.

O Protheus, let this habit make thee blush!
Be thou ashamed, that I have took upon me
Such an immodest raiment. Shaksp. Titus Andronicus.

Living, both food and raiment she supplies. Dryden.

You are to consider them as the servants and instruments of action, and so give them food, and rest, and raiment, that they may be strong and healthful to do the duties of a charitable, useful, pious life. Locke.

To RAIN, v. n. [nenian, Saxon; re- genen, Dutch.]

1. To fall in drops from the clouds.

Like a low-hung cloud, it rains so fast,
That all at once it falls. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
The wind is south-west, and the weather low-ring, and like to rain. Locke.

2. To fall as rain

The eye marvelleth at the whiteness thereof, and the heart is astonish'd at the raining of it.
Ecclus. xliii. 13.

They sat them down to weep; nor only tears
Ran down their eyes, but high winds rose within.
Milton.

3. RAINS. The water falls from the clouds.

That

That which serves for gain,
And follows but for form.
Will pack when it begins to rain.
And leave thee in the storm. Shakspeare, King Lear.
TO RAIN. v. a. To pour down as rain.
It rain'd down fortune, how long on your head.
Shakspeare.

Rain is a celestial which rains in his ear;
Make sacred even his drops. Shakspeare, Timon of Athens.
Israel here had faith; he had not God
Rain'd from his manna. Milton's Paradise Lost.
RAIN. n. s. [rain, Saxon.] The moisture that falls from the clouds.

When shall we three meet again,
In thunder, lightning, or in rain? Shakspeare.
Which things rains, hails, and showers were they permitted. Wisd. xvi. 16.

The left clouds pour
Into the sea an useless shower,
And the west sailors curse the rain,
For which poor farmers pray'd in vain. Wallace.
Rain is water by the heat of the sun divided into very small parts ascending in the air, till encountering the cold, it is condensed into clouds, and descends in drops. Rey.

RAINBOW. n. s. [rain and bow.] The iris; the semicircle of various colours which appears in showery weather.

Casting off the water in a most cunning manner, makes a perfect rainbow, not more pleasant to the eye than to the mind, so sensibly to fix the proof of the heavenly iris. Sidney.

To add another hue unto the rainbow. Shakspeare.
The rainbow is drawn like a nymph with large wings dispersed in the form of a semicircle, the feathers of sundry colours. Pennant.

They could not be ignorant of the promise of God never to drown the world, and the rainbow before their eyes to put them in mind of it. Brown.

This rainbow never appears but where it rains in the sun-shine, and may be made artificially by spouting up water, which may break soft, and scatter into drops, and fall down like rain; for the sun, shining upon these drops, certainly causes the bow to appear to a spectator standing in a true position to the rain and sun: this bow is made by refraction of the sun's light in drops of falling rain.
Newton.

The dome's high arch reflects the mingled blaze,
And forms a rainbow of alternate rays.
Gay rainbows fill her mellow charms in fold,
And nought of Lyce but herself is old. Young.

RAINDEER. n. s. [Ranar, Sax. rangifer, Latin.] A deer with large horns, which, in the northern regions, draws sledges through the snow.

RAININESS. n. s. [from rainy.] The state of being showery.

RAIN-WATER. n. s. [rain and water.]
Water not taken from springs, but falling from the clouds.

Cold holy water in a dry house, is better than the rain-water out of doors. Shakspeare, King Lear.
We took distilled rain-water. Boyle.
Rain-water is to be preferred before spring-water.
Morimer.

RAINY. adj. [from rain.] Showery;
wet.

Our gayness and our gilt are all besmirch'd,
With rainy marching in the painful field. Shakspeare.
A continual dropping in a very rainy day, and a contentious woman, are alike. Proverbs, xxvii. 15.

TO RAISE. v. a. [reisa, Swedish; reiser, Danish.]

1. To lift; to heave.
The elders went to raise him up from the earth.
2 Sam. iii.

Such a bulk as no twelve hands could raise.
Twelve strongling hands of these degenerate days.
Pope.

2. To set upright; as, he raised a mast.
Vol. II.

3. To erect; to build up.
Take his chains down from the tree, cast him the unerring of the gun, and raise them a heap of bones. Johnson, viii.

4. To exalt to a state more great or illat-trious.

Counsellors may manage affairs, which nevertheless are far from the ability to raise and amplify an estate. Bacon.

Those in pleas'd,
Canst raise thy creature to what height thou wilt
Of union. Milton.

5. To amplify; to enlarge.
That cyclops head of things was first from'd forth,
To raise the fortune. Shakspeare's King Lear.

6. To increase in current value.
The plate pieces of eight were raised three-pence in the piece. Temple's Miscellaneous.

7. To elevate; to exalt.
The Puritans gazing on the sun,
Admire how high 'twas plac'd, how bright it shone.
But as his power was known, their thoughts were rais'd,
And soon they worshipp'd what at first they prais'd.
Pejar.

8. To advance; to promote; to prefer.
This gentleman came to be raised to great offices.
Clarendon.

9. To excite; to put in action.
He raised the stormy wind. Plaut. civ. 28.
He might raise
The animal spirits, that from pure blood arise, Thence raise disorder'd thoughts. Milton.

10. To excite to war or tumult; to stir up.
He stirr'd up a quarrel against sleeping Richard.
Shakspeare.

They neither found me in the temple sleeping with any man, neither raising up the people. Acts.
Aeneas then employs his pikes
In parts remote to raise the Tyrian swains. Dryden.

11. To rouse; to stir up.
They shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep. Job.

12. To give beginning to; as, he raised the family.

13. To bring into being.
One hath ventur'd from the deep to raise
New troubles. Milton.

God vouchsafes to raise another world
From him. Milton.

14. To call into view from the state of separate spirits.
The spirits of the deceased, by certain spells and infernal sacrifices, were raised. Sandys's Journey.
These are species the understanding raises to itself, to flatter its own laziness. Locke.

15. To bring from death to life.
He was deliver'd for our offences, and raised again for our justification. Romans, iv. 25.
It is shown in dishonour, it is raised in glory; it is shown in weakness, it is raised in power.
Corinthians, xv. 23.

16. To occasion; to begin.
Rais'd not a false report. Exodus, xxi. 1.
The common ferryman of Egypt, that wafted over the dead bodies from Memphis, was made by the Greeks to be the ferryman of hell, and several stories raised after him. Hervey.

Wantonness and pride
Raise out of friendship hostile deeds in grace. Milt.

17. To set up; to utter loudly.
All gaze, and all admire, and raise a shouting sound. Dryden.
Soon as the prince appears, they raise a cry. Dry.

18. To collect; to get in a certain sum.
Britain, once despoil'd, and rais'd
At last, to sum, as Rome is call'd, a debt. Arbut.

It raised not this in sound,
If I had means, and could the rate be found. Guy.

19. To collect; to assemble; to levy.
He set of small things could without end
Have rais'd a mighty army. Milton.

20. To give rise to.
Higher argument
Remains, sufficient of itself to raise
That name, unless years damp my wing. Milton.

21. To procure to be bred, or propagated;
as, he raised sheep; he raised wheat
where none grew before.

22. To raise is, in all its senses, to elevate from low to high, from mean to distinguished, from obscure to famous, or to do something that may be by an easy

23. To raise a raffle. To form palles into pies without a dish.
Miss Liddycote dances a jig, and raise posse. Speckard.

RAISER. n. s. [from raise.] He that raises.

And drink the dark-deep water of the spring,
Bright Arcturus, the most nourishing Raiser of heads. Chapman.

Then shall stand up in his estate a raiser of taxes.
Danish, 21.

They that are the first raisers of their houses, are most indulgent towards their children. Ricen.

He that boasts of his ancestors, the founders and raisers of a family, doth confess that he hath less virtue. Taylor.

Raiser of human kind; by nature cast,
Naked and helpless. Thomson's Autumn.

RAISIN. n. s. [racemus, Latin; raisin, French.]

Raisins are the fruit of the vine suffered to remain on the tree till perfectly ripened, and then dried; grapes of every kind, preserved in this manner, are called raisins, but those dried in the sun are much sweeter and pleasanter than those dried in press; they are called jar raisins, from their being imported in earthen jars. Hist.

Dried grapes or raisins, boiled in a convenient proportion of water, make a sweet liquor, which being better distilled, affords an oil and spirit much like the raisins themselves. Boyle.

RAKE. n. s. [rastrum, Latin; race, Sax. rachte, Dutch.]

1. An instrument with teeth, by which the ground is divided, or light bodies are gathered up.

As midwinters down with the breamles and brakes,
And after abroad with thy spades and thy rakes. Tupper.

O that thy haughty deity would please

1. To put disordered or dispersed forces into order.

With rallied arms to try what may be yet

Regain'd in heav'n.

Milton.

Publick arguing serves to whet the wits of hereticks, and by shewing weak parts of their doctrines, prompts them to rally all their topickry to fortify them with fallacy.

Dodg's Phry.

Luther deters men from superstition; but he does not mean from a sober solitude, that rallies our scattered strengths, and prepares us against any new encounters from without.

2. [Rallier, French.] To treat with slight contempt; to treat with satirical merriment.

Moneycomb has not lived a month, for these forty years, out of the smoke of London, and rallies us upon a country life.

If after the reading of this letter, you find yourself in a humour rather to rally and ridicule, than to comfort me, I desire you would throw it into the fire.

Addison.

Strephon had long confess'd his am'rous pain, Which gay Corinna rally'd with disdain.

Gay.

TO RALLY, v. n.

1. To come together in a hurry.

If God should shew this perverse man a new heaven and a new earth, springing out of nothing, he might so rally innumerable parts of matter charced just now as only together, and to form themselves into this new world.

Tillotson.

2. To come again into order.

The Circassians rally, and their pow'rs unite;

With fury charge us.

Dryden's Aeneis.

3. To exercise satirical merriment.

He lies at random carelessly diffus'd,

With languish'd head unprop'd,

As one pall hope abandon'd. Milton.

Fond love his dart at random throws,

And nothing springs from what he sows. Wallen.

The striker must be dense, and in its best velocity: the angle, which the mallet is to mount by, if we will have it go to its further randum, must be the half of a right one; and the figure of the mallet must be such, as may give scope to the air to bear it. Digby.

In the days of old the birds lived at random in a lawless state of anarchy, but in time they moved

Who could govern the dependence of one event

upon another, if that event happened at random, and was not cast into a certain relation to some foregoing purpose to direct? South's Sermons.

'Tis one thing when a person of true merit is drawn as like as we can; and another, when we make a fine thing at random, and persuade the next vain creature that 'tis his own likeness. Pope.

RANDOM. adj. Done by chance; roving without direction.

1 L 2

Virtue

Virtue borrow'd but the arms of chance,
And stuck a rand-m blow, 'twas fortune's work,
And fortune take the praise. Dryden.

RANFORCK. n. f. The ring of a gun next the spuchhole. Bailey.

RANG. prétérite of ring.

1. To place in order; to put in ranks.
Mace was rang'd in army by bands, and went up at Timol's. 2 Afr. An. 20.
It was not the marquis till the battle was rang'd.
Clarendon.

Somewhat rais'd
By this presumptuous hope, the rang'd bow is Dunk'd, and wand'ring each his several way Pursues. Milton.

Men, from the qualities they find united in them, and wherein they observe several individuals to agree, range them into sorts for the convenience of comprehensive signs. Locke.

A certain form and order in which we have long accustomed ourselves to turn our ideas, may be best for us now, though not originally best in itself. Watts.

2. To rove over.
To the captain's lesser spaniel take,
Teach him to range the ditch and force the brake.
Gay.

To RANGE. v. n.

1. To love at large.
Cæsar's spirit ranging for revenge,
With Ate by his side come hot from hell,
Shall in these confines, with a monarch's voice,
Clasp havoc, and let slip the dogs of war. Shakspeare.
I saw him in the battle range about;
And watch'd him how he fugged Clifford forth.
Shakspeare.

As a roving lion and a ranging bear; so is a wicked ruler over the poor people. Prov. xxviii. 15.
Other animals unactive range;
And of their things God takes no account. Milton.
Thanks to my stars, I have not rang'd about
The wilds of life, ere I could find a friend. Addison.

2. To be placed in order; to be ranked properly.

It better to be lowly born,
And range with humble lives in content,
Than to be peck'd up in a glist'ning grief,
And wear a golden sorrow. Shakspeare Henry VIII.
That is the way to try the city rat,
To bring the root to the foundation,
And to show the world how we doth range.
In hope of rain. Shakspeare's Cæsar.

3. To live in a particular direction.
Hast thou seen aught, as with the hand to show Which way the winds range, which way they never flow. Dryden.

RANGE. n. f. [rangee, French; from the verb.]

1. A rank; any thing placed in a line.

From that great sea of war, whose several ranges Frighted each other. Shakspeare's Romeo and Juliet.
The light, which pierc'd through its several interstices, painted forth its ranges of colour, which were parallel and contiguous, and without any mixture of white. Milton.

From this work you have a full view of a series of mountains, that lie in the country of the Gedons. Hutchins.

These ranges of barren mountains, by confusing the vapours and producing rains, is a cause, and cause, give the very plants that rest by their foot.
Bentley's Læmon.

A class; an order.
The next range of beings above us are the immortal intelligences, the next below them is the sensible nature. Hale.

3. Excursion; wandering.

He may take a range all the world over, and draw in all that wide circumference of sin and vice, and center it in his own breast. South's Sermons.

4. Room for excursion.

A man has not enough range of thought, to look out for any good which does not relate to his own interest. Addison.

5. Compass taken in by any thing excursive, extended, or ranked in order.

The range and compass of Hammond's knowledge filled the whole circle of the arts. Pitt.

Far as creation's ample range extends,
The scale of sensual mental pow'rs ascends. Pope.
Judge we by nature? habit can efface,
Affections? they still take a wider range. Pope.

6. Step of a ladder.

The leucy, practis'd in England, would kindle that jealousy, as the prodigium to that design, and as the first range of that ladder, which should serve to mount over all their customs. Clarendon.

7. A kitchen grate.

It was a vault built for great dispense,
With many ranges seat'd along the wall,
And one great chimney. Spenser.

The buttery must be visible, and we need for out ranges, a more spacious and luminous kitchen.
Wotton's Architecture.

The implements of the kitchen are spits, ranges, cobblers, and pots. Bacon's Physical Remains.

range, and let down the girders. L'Estrange.

8. A bolting sieve to sift meal.

RANGER. n. f. [from range.]

1. One that ranges; a rover; a robber.
They walk not widely as they were wont,
For fear of rangers and the great hoont,
But privily prying to and fro. Spenser's Pastoral.
Come, says the ranger, here's neither honour nor money to be got by staying. L'Estrange.

2. A dog that beats the ground.

Let your obsequious range fetch around,
Nor will the roving spy direct in vain,
But numerous coveys gratify thy pain. Gay.

3. An officer who tends the game of a forest.

Their father Tyrrheus did his fodder bring,
Tyrrheus chief range to the Latian king. Dryden.

RANK. adj. [rank, Saxon.]

1. High growing; strong; luxuriant.

Rank with the grille,
That groweth down to rank and so stout. Spenser.

Is not thine same gotche and proud
That sits in yonder bank,
Whole straying heard themselves shrowde
Among the bushes rank? Spenser.
Who would be out, being before his beloved rusticks?
— That should you, if I were your mistress, or
I should thank my honesty ranker than my wit.
Shakspeare.

In which disguise,
Whole other jests are something rank on foot,
Her father hath commanded her to slip Away with slender. Shakspeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

Team lastly thither com' with water is to rank,
As though she would contend with Sabyn. Dryden.
Hemp rank huge y rank. Dryden.
Seven ears came up upon one stalk, rank and good. Gongora.

They fancy that the difference lies in the manner of apple, one being made by a fuller or ranker

A soldier of far inferior strength may manage a rapier in five arms to expertise, as to be an overmatch for his adversary. Pope.

RAPIER-FISH n. f.

The rapier fish, called xiphias, grows sometime to the length of five yards: the sword, which grows level from the fin to the snout, is here about a yard long, at the base four inches over, two edged, and pointed exactly like a rapier. he preys on fishes, having first stabbed them with this sword. Grew.

RAPINE n. f. [rapina, Latin; rapine,
French.]

1. The act of plundering.

If the poverty of Scotland might, yet the plenty of England cannot, excuse the envy and rapine of the church's rights. King Charles.

The logic of a conquering sword may silence, but convince it cannot; its efficacy rather breeds aversion and abhorrence of that religion, whose first addition is in blood and rapine. Deity of Piety.

2. Violence; force.

Her last action overaw'd
His malice, and with rapine sweet became'd

South.

I saw three rarities of different kinds, which pleased me more than any other shows of the place.

Addison.

3. Thinness; subtlety: the contrary to density.

Bodies, under the same outward bulk, have a greater thinness and expansion, or thickness and solidity, which terms, in English, do not signify fully those differences of quantity, therefore I will do it under the names of rarity and density.

Digby.

This I do, not to draw any argument against them from the universal rest or accurately equal diffusion of matter, but only that I may better demonstrate the great rarity and tenuity of their imaginary chaos.

Bentley's Sermons.

RA'SCAL. n. f. [rascal, Saxon, a lean beast.]

1. A mean fellow; a scoundrel; a sorry wretch.

For the rascal common, left he cared. And when him all the rascal routs appal, Men into stones their with he could transmute.

Spenser.

When Marcus Brutus grows so covetous To lock such rascal counters from his friends; He ready, gods, with all your thunder bolts, Darts him to piece.

Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

The rascal people, thirsting after prey, Join with the traitor.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

But for our gentlemen, The mouse ne'er should the cat, as they did budge, From rascals worse than they.

Shakespeare.

I am accus'd to rob in that thief's company, the rascal hath remov'd my horse.

Shakespeare.

Scoundrels are silent to their superiors, but it does not become a man of honour to contest with mean rascals.

L'Estrange.

Did I not see you, rascal, did I not? When you lay snug to snare young Damon's goat?

Dryden.

I have sent, to serve my turn, in store, And he's a rascal who pretends to more.

Dryden.

The poor girl provoked told him he lay'd like a rascal.

See it.

2. RASCAL deer, are still mentioned for lean deer.

RASCALION. n. f. [from rascal.] One of the lowest people.

That proud dame Us'd him so like a base rascalion, That old P. g.—what d'ye call him—malion, That cut his mistress out of stone, Had not to hand a hearted one.

Hudibras.

RASCALITY. n. f. [from rascal.] The low mean people.

Preceded philosophers judge as ignorantly in their way, as the rascality in theirs.

Glenn.

Jeroboam having procured his people gods, the next thing was to provide priests, hereupon, to the calves he adds a commission, for the approving, trying, and admitting the rascality and lowest of the people to minister in that service.

South.

RA'SCALLY. adj. [from rascal.] Mean; worthless.

Wouldst thou not be glad to have the niggardly rascally sheep biter come by some notable shame?

Shakespeare.

Our rascally porter is fallen fast asleep with the black cloth and sconces, or we might have been tacking up by this time.

Swift.

TO RASE. v. a. [This word is written rase or raze: I would write rase, when it signifies to strike slightly, perfringere; and raze, when it signifies to ruin, delere; razer, French; raius, Latin.]

1. To skim; to strike on the surface.

He certifies your lordship, that this night He dream'd the bear had ras'd off his helm.

L'Estrange.

Declare the secret villain, The watch so meanly bafe to ingratiate, So rashly brave to dare the sword of Ithacus.

Smith.

RA'SHNESS. n. f. [from rash.] Foolish contempt of danger; inconsiderate heat of temper; precipitation; temerity.

Who teach not what sentence it shall enforce us to give against all churches in the world; in as much as there is not one, but hath had many things established in it, which though the scripture did never command, yet for us to condemn were rashness.

Nature.

Nature to youth hot affness doth dispende,
But with cold prudence age doth recompense.

Dr. Ham.

In so speaking, we offend indeed against truth;
yet we offend not properly by falsehood, which is a speaking against our thoughts; but by affness, which is an assuming or denying, before we have sufficiently informed ourselves.

South.

The vain Moral by his own affness wrought,
Too soon discover'd his ambitious thought,
Believ'd me he, because I spoke him fair.

Dryden.

RASP. n. f. [raspo, Italian.] A delicious berry that grows on a species of the bramble; a raspberry.

Now will the corinths, now the rasps supply
Delicious draughts, when press'd to wine.

To RASP. v. a. [raspen, Dutch; rasper, French; raspare, Italian.] To rub to powder with a very rough file.

Some authors have advised the rasping of these bones; but in this case it is needless.

Wifeman.

Having prepared hard woods and ivory for the lathe with rasping, they pitch it between the pikes.

Maxon.

RASP. n. f. [from the verb.] A large rough file, commonly used to wear away wood.

Cafe hardening is used by file-cutters, when they make coarse files, and generally most rasps have formerly been made of iron and cafe hardened.

RA'SPATORY. n. f. [raspatour, French;
from rasp.] A surgeon's rasp.

I put into his mouth a raspatory, and pulled away the corrupt flesh, and with cauteries burnt it to croud.

Wifeman's Surgery.

RA'SPBERRY, or Raspberry. n. f. A kind of berry.

Raspberries are of three sorts, the common wild one, the large red garden raspberry, which is one of the pleasiest of fruits, and the white, which is little inferior to the red.

RAT. n. f. [ratte, Dutch; rat, French;
ratta, Span.] An animal of the mouse kind that infests houses and ships.

Our natures do pursue,

Like rats that cavin down their proper bane.

Shak.

Make you ready y. ur stiff bits and clubs,
Rome and her rats are at the point of battle.

Shak.

I have seen the time, with my long sword I would have made you y. ur tall fellows skip like rats.

Shakspere.

Thus horses will kneble at walls, and rats will gnaw iron.

Bacon's Tisgar Errors.

If in despair he goes out of the way like a rat with a dose of a senick, why he dies nobly.

To smell a RAT. To be put on the watch by suspicion, as the cat by the scent of a rat; to suspect danger.

Quoth Hudibras, I smell a rat,
Ralpho, thou art a revivator.

Hudibras.

RA'PABLE. adj. [from rate.] Set at a certain value.

The Dames brought in a reckoning of money by ores, pe. oras, I count out of the abby board of Burton, that twenty ore were ra'pable to two marks of silver.

Candler's Reman.

RA'TABLY. adv. Proportionably.

Many times there is no proportion of shot and powder allowed ratably by that quantity of the great ordnance.

Raleigh.

wheel, which serves to lift up the de-tents every hour, and thereby make the clock strike.

RATE. n. f. [ratat, Lat. rate, old Fr.]

1. Price fixed on any thing.

How many things do we value, because they come at dear rates from Japan and China, which if they were our own manufacture, common to be had, and for a little money, would be neglected?

Locke.

I'll not betray the glory of my name,

'Tis not for me, who have preserv'd a state,

To buy an empire at so base a rate.

Dryden.

The price of land has never changed, in the several changes have been made in the rate of interest by law; nor now that the rate of interest is by law the same, is the price of land every where the same.

2. Allowance settled.

His allowance was a continual allowance, a daily
rate for every day.

2 Kings, xxv. 30.

They obliged themselves to remit after the rate of twelve hundred thousand pounds sterling per annum, divided into so many monthly payments.

Adams.

3. Degree; comparative height or value.

I am a spirit of no common rate;

The furnace still doth tend upon my state.

Shaksp.

In this did his holiness and godliness appear above the rate and pitch of other men, in that he was so infinitely merciful.

Calamy.

To which relation whatsoever is done agreeably, is morally and essentially good, and whatsoever is done otherwise, is at the same rate morally evil.

4. Quantity assignable.

In goodly form comes on the enemy;

And by the ground they hide, I judge their number Upon or near the rate of thirty thousand.

Shaksp.

5. That which sets value.

Heretofore the rate and standard of wit was very different from what it is now a-days: no man was then accounted a wit for speaking such things, as deserve a rate, as tongue cut out.

South.

A virtuous heathen is, at this rate, as happy
as a virtuous christian.

Ayerbury.

6. Manner of doing any thing; degree to which any thing is done:

I have disabled mine estate,

By shewing something a more twolling port,

I than my farm means would grant continuance;

Nor do I now make moan to be abridged

From such a noble rate.

Shak. Merch. of Venice.

Many of the horse could not march at that rate;

nor come up soon enough.

Clarendon.

Tom hinting his dislike of some trifle his mistress had said, she asked him how he would talk to her after marriage, if he talked at this rate before?

Adams.

7. Tax imposed by the parish.

They paid the church and parish rate,

And took, but read not the receipts.

Prior.

To RATE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To value at a certain price.

I freely told you, all the wealth I had

Ran in my veins, I was a gentleman;

And yet, den lady,

Rating myself as nothing, you shall see

How much I was a braggart.

Shakspere.

We may there be instructed, how to name and rate all goods, by those that will concur into felicity.

Boyl.

You seem not high enough your joys to rate,

You stand indebted a vast sum to fate,

And should large thanks for the great blessing pay.

Dryden.

2. [Rita, Islandick.] To chide hastily and vehemently.

Go rate thy minions, proud insulting boy;

Becomes it thee to be thus bold in terms

Before thy sovereign? Shakspere's Henry VI.

An old lord of the council rated me the other day in the street about you, Sir.

Shakspere.

What is all that a man enjoys, from a year's converse, comparable to what he feels for one hour, when his conscience shall take him aside and rate
him by himself.

South.

If words are sometimes to be used, they ought to be grave, kind, and sober, representing the ill or unbecomingness of the faults, rather than a hasty rating of the child for it.

Locke.

To RATE. v. n. To make an estimate.

In rating, when things are thus little and frivolous, we must not judge by our own pride and passions, which count nothing little, but aggrandize every affront or injury that is done to ourselves.

Kittlewell.

RATH. n. f. A hill. I know not whence derived.

There is a great use among the Irish, to make great assemblies upon a rath or hill, there to parly about matters and wrongs between townships or private persons.

Spenser.

RATH. adj. [rað, Saxon, quickly.]

Early; coming before the usual time.

Thus is my summer worn away and wasted,

Thus is my harvest hasten'd all to rathe,

The ear, that budded late, is burst and bare,

And all my hoped gain is turn'd to care.

Spenser.

Rath ripe at some, and some of later kind,

Of golden some, and some of purple kind.

May.

Bring the rath primrose that forsaken die,

The tufted crow-wee and pale jessamine.

Milton.

RA'THER. adv. [This is a comparative from rað; rað, Saxon, soon. Now out of use. One may still say, by the same form of speaking, I will sooner do this than that; that is, I like better to do this.]

1. More willingly; with better liking.

Almighty God desireth not the death of a sinner, but rather that he should turn from his wickedness and live.

Common Prayer.

2. Preferably to the other; with better reason.

'Tis rather to be thought, that an heir had no such right by divine institution, than that God should give such a right, but yet leave it undeterminate who such heir is.

Locke.

3. In a greater degree than otherwise.

He fought through the world, but fought in vain,

And no where finding, rather fear'd her slain.

Dryden.

4. More properly.

This is an art,

Which does mend nature, change it rather, but

The art itself is nature.

Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

5. Especially.

You are come to me in a happy time,

The rather for I have some sport in hand.

Shakspere.

6. To have RATHER. [This is, I think, a barbarous expression of late intrusion into our language, for which it is better to say will rather.] To desire in preference.

'Tis with reluctance he is provoked by our impenitence to apply the discipline of severity; he had rather mankind should adore him as their patron and benefactor.

Rogers.

RATIFICATION. n. f. [ratification, Fr. from ratify] The act of ratifying;
confirmation.

RA'TIFIER. n. f. [from ratify.] The person or thing that ratifies.

They

"They cry, 'chuse we Laertes for our king!'"
The rat flies and props of every word,
Caps, hands, and tongues applaud it to the clouds.

Shakespeare.

To RATIFY. v. a. [ratum facio, Lat.]

To confirm; to settle

The church being a body which dieth not, hath always power, as occasion requireth, no let, to ordain that which never was, than to ratify what has been before.

Hooker.

By the help of these, with him above

To ratify the work, we may again

Give to our tables meat, sleep to our nights. Sh. A.

We have ratified unto them the borders of Judæa.

Milton.

God ratified their prayers by the judgment brought down upon the head of him whom they prayed against.

South.

Tell me, my friend, from whence had'st thou
the skill,

So nicely to distinguish good from ill?

And what thou art to follow, what to fly,

'Thou to condemn, and that to ratify?' Dryden.

RATIO n. f. [Latin.] Proportion.

Whatever inclinations the rays have, to the plane of incidence, the sine of the angle of incidence of every ray, considered apart, shall have to the sine of the angle of refraction a constant ratio.

Chyrc.

To RATIOCINATE. v. n. [ratiocinor,
Latin.] To reason; to argue.

RATIOCINATION. n. f. [ratiocinatio, Lat.] The act of reasoning; the act of deducing consequences from premises.

In simple terms, expressing the open notions of things, which the second act of reason compoundeth into proposition, and the last into syllogisms and forms of ratiocination.

Brown.

The discerning of that connexion or dependence which there is betwixt several propositions, whereby we are enabled to infer one proposition from another, which is called ratiocination, or discourse.

Wilkins.

Can any kind of ratiocination allow Christ all the marks of the Messiah, and yet deny him to be the Messiah?

South.

Such an inscription would be self-evident without any ratiocination or study, and could not fail constantly to exert its energy in their minds.

Bentley.

RATIOCINATIVE. adj. [from ratiocinate.]

Argumentative; advancing by process of discourse.

Some confutations are so intimately and evidently connected to, or found in the premises, that the conclusion is attained quasi per saltum, and without any thing of ratiocinative process, even as the eye sees his object immediately, and without any previous discourse. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

RATIONAL. adj. [rationalis, Latin.]

1. Having the power of reasoning.

God decreed to create man after his own image,
a free and rational agent.

Hammond.

As that which hath a fitness to promote the welfare of man, considered as a sensitive being, is stiled natural good; so that which hath a fitness to promote the welfare of man, as a rational, voluntary and free agent, is stiled moral good; and the contrary to it moral evil.

Wilkins.

If it is our glory and happiness to have a rational nature, that is endued with wisdom and reason, that is capable of imitating the divine nature, then it must be our glory and happiness to improve our reason and wisdom, to act up to the excellency of our rational nature, and to imitate God in all our actions, to the utmost of our power.

Lavo.

2. Agreeable to reason.

What higher in her society thou find'st

Attractive, humane, rational, love still.

Milton.

When the conclusion is deduced from the unerring dictates of our faculties, we say the argument is rational.

Glennville's Sermon.

If your arguments be rational, (list them in a

VOL. II.

moving a man as the nature of the subject will admit; but beware of letting the pathetick part swallow up the rational.

Swift

3. Wise; judicious: as, a rational man.

RATIONAL. n. f. [from ratio, Latin.]

A detail with reasons: as, Dr. Sparrow's Rationale of the Common Prayer.

RATIONALIST. n. f. [from rational.]

One who proceeds in his disquisitions and practice wholly upon reason.

He often used this comparison: the empirical philosophers are like to plimbers, they only lay up and use their store: the rationalists are like to spiders, they spin all out of their own bowels: but give me a philosopher, who, like the bee, hath a middle faculty, gathering from abroad, but digesting that which is gathered by his own virtue.

Bacon

RATIONALITY. n. f. [from rational.]

1. The power of reasoning.

When God has made rationality the common portion of mankind, how came it to be thy inclosure?

Government of the Tongue.

2. Reasonableness.

In human occurrence, there have been many well directed intentions, whose rationality will never bear a rigid examination. Brown's Fug. Err.

RATIONALLY. adv. [from rational.]

Reasonably; with reason.

Upon the proposal of an agreeable object, it may rationally be conjectured, that a man's choice will rather incline him to accept than to refuse it.

South.

RATIONALNESS. n. f. [from rational.]

The state of being rational.

RATTSNAKE. n. f. [rat and bans.] Poison for rats; arsenick.

He would throw rattsnake up and down a house,
where children might come at it.

L'Estrange.

When murder's out, what vice can we advance?
Unless the new found poisoning trick of France,
And when their art of rattsnake we have got,
By way of thanks, we'll send 'em o'er our plot.

Dryden.

I can hardly believe the relation of his being poisoned, but sack might do it, though rattsnake would not.

Swift to Pope.

RATTEEN. n. f. A kind of stuff.

We'll rig in Meath-street Egypt's haughty queen,
And Anthony shall court her in ratteen.

Swift.

To RATTLE. v. n. [ratelen, Dutch.]

1. To make a quick sharp noise with frequent repetitions and collisions of bodies not very sonorous: when bodies are sonorous, it is called jingling.

The quiver rattles against him. Job, xxxix. 23.

The noise of a whip, of the rattling of the wheels, of prancing horses, and of the jumping chariots.

Nabum, iii. 2.

They had, to affright the enemies horses, big rattles covered with parchment, and small stones within; but the rattling of shot might have done better service.

Hayward.

He was too warm on picking work to dwell;
He forgot his notions as they fell,
And if they rhym'd and rattled all was well.

Dryden.

There she assembles all her blackest storms,
And the rude hail in rattling tempest forms.

Addis.

2. To speak eagerly and noisily.

With jealous eyes at distance she hath seen Whip ring with Jove the silver-footed queen;
Then, impotent of tongue, her silence broke,
Thus turbulent in rattling tone she spoke.

Dryden.

He is a man of pleasure, and a free-thinker; he is an assertor of liberty and property; he rattles it out against popery.

Swift.

To RATTLE. v. a.

1. To move any thing so as to make a rattle or noise.

Her chains she rattles, and her whip she shakes.

Dryden.

2. To stun with a noise; to drive with a noise

Sound but another, and another shall,

As loud as thine, rattle the welkin's ear.

And mark the deep-mouth'd thunder. Shakespeare.

He should be well enough able to scatter the hush as a flight of birds, and rattle away this swarm of bees with their king.

Bacon.

3. To scold; to rail at with clamour.

Heating Atop had been beforehand, he sent for him in a rage, and ratted him with a thousand trifles, and villains for robbing his house. L'Estr.

She that would sometimes rattle off her servants shinily, now if she saw them drunk, never took notice.

Arbutnot.

RATTLE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A quick noise numbly repeated.

I'll hold ten pound my dream is out;

I'd tell it you but for the rattle

Of those contounded dreams.

Prior.

2. Empty and loud talk.

All this ado about the golden age, is but an empty rattle and frivolous conceit.

Hobbes.

3. An instrument, which agitated makes a clattering noise.

The rattle of his and the cymbals of Brastien nearly enough resemble each other.

Ralegh.

Opinions are the rattles of immature intellects, but the advanced reasons have outgrown them.

Glennville's Sermon.

They want no rattles for their froward mood,
Nor noise to reconcile them to their food.

Dryden.

farewel then wife, and love, and every toy,

The thymes and rattles of the man or boy;

What right, what true, what fit we justly call,

Let this be all my car, for this is all.

Pope.

4. A plant. [crisla galli, Latin.] An herb resembling a cock's-comb.

RATTLE-HEADED. adj. [rattle and head.]

Giddy; not steady.

RATTLE-SNAKE. n. f. A kind of serpent.

The rattlesnake is so called, from the rattle at the end of his tail.

Grav's Museum.

She loses her being at the very sight of him, and drops plump into his arms, like a charmed bird into the mouth of a rattlesnake.

Mo's Foundling.

RATTLE-SNAKE Root n. f.

Rattlesnake root, called also leueka, belongs to a plant, a native of Virginia; the Indians use it as a certain remedy against the bite of a rattlesnake.

Hill.

To RAVAGE. v. a. [ravager, Fr.] To lay waste; to sack; to rantack; to spoil;

to pillage; to plunder.

Already Caesar

Has ravag'd more than half the globe, and sees

Mankind grown thin by his destructive sword.

His blatts obey, and quit the howling hill,

The shatter'd forest, and the ravag'd vale.

Thomf.

RAVAGE. n. f. [ravage, French; from the verb.] Spoil; ruin; waste.

Some cruel pleasure will from thence arise,

To view the mighty ravage of your eyes.

Would one think 'twere possible to love

To make such ravage in a noble soul?

Addis.

Those savages were not then, what civilized mankind is now; but without mutual society, without arms of offence, without houses or fortifications, an obvious and exposed prey to the ravage of devouring beasts.

Bentley.

RAVAGER. n. f. [from ravage.] Plunderer; spoiler.

When that mighty empire was overthrown by the northern people, vast sums of money were buried to escape the plundering of the conquerors; and what remained was carried off by those ravagers.

Swift.

RAUCITY. n. f. [raucus, Lat.] Hoarseness; loud rough noise.

Inequality not stayed upon, but passing, is rather an increase of sweetness; as in the purling of a wreathed string, and in the raucosity of a trumpet.

Bacon's Natural History.

To RAVE. v. n. [rauen, Dutch; réver, French.]

1. To be delirious; to talk irrationally.

Men who thus rave, we may conclude their brains are turned, and one may as well read lectures at Bedlam as treat with such.

Government of the Tongue.

It soon inteth the whole member, and is accompanied with watching and raving. Wylmar.

His gut has wrought her into frenzy, The rages her troubled fancy forms Are incoherent, wild; her words disjointed: Sometimes she raves for murther, light, and air; Nor air, nor light, nor musick calm her pains.

Smith.

2. To burst out into furious exclamations as if mad.

Shall this wild distemper of thy mind, This temper of thy tongue, this rave, and find No opposition?

Handys's Paraphrase on Job.

Our ravings and complaints are but like arrows shot up into the air, at no mark, and so to no purpose.

Temple.

Wonder at my patience, Have I not cause to rave, and beat my breast, To rend my heart with grief, and run distracted?

Adison.

Revenge, revenge, thus raving through the streets,

I'll cry for vengeance. Scutcheon's Spartan Dame. He swore he could not leave me, With ten thousand ravings. Royal Convert.

3. To be unreasonably fond; with upon before the object of fondness. A colloquial and improper sense.

Another partiality is as fantastical and wild, attributing all knowledge to the ancients or the moderns: this raving upon antiquity, in matter of poetry, Horace has wittily exposed in one of his satires.

Locke.

To RAVEL. v. a. [ravelen, Dutch, to entangle.]

1. To entangle; to entwine one with another; to make intricate; to involve; to perplex.

If then such praise the Macedonian got, For having rudely cut the Gordian knot, What pity's due to him that could divide Such ravel'd intricacies, has the knot untied, And without stroke to finish a passage made, Whose craft and malice such obstruction laid?

Waller.

2. To unweave; to unknot; as, to ravel out a twist or piece of knit work.

Let him for a pair of watchy knives Or pulling in your neck with his damn'd fingers, Make you a ravel'd knot, and knit out.

Shakespeare.

3. To hurry over in confusion. This seems to be the meaning in Digby.

They put it over Lebel's, and pick upon disputing about particular conclusion: that at the first encounter of them single, seem hard to them.

Digby.

To RAVIL. v. t.

1. To fall into perplexity or confusion.

As you unwind your love from him, Let it should ravel, and be good to none, You must provide to bottom it in love. Shakespeare. Give the reins to wandering thoughts, Rec'd is of his glory's diminution; Till by their own perplexities involv'd, They ravel more, still less resolv'd, But never find self satisfying solution.

Milton.

2. To work in perplexity; to busy himself with intricacies.

It will be needless to ravel far into the records of elder times; every man's memory will suggest many pertinent instances.

Decey of Party.

The humour of raveling into all these mythical or intangled matters, mingling with the interest and passions of princes and of parties, and thereby heightened and inflamed, produced infinite disputes.

Temple.

RAVELIN. n. s. [French.] In fortification, a work that consists of two faces, that make a salient angle, commonly called half moon by the soldiers: it is raised before the courlines or counterescarps.

Dia.

RAVEN. n. s. [hæpæn, Saxon.] A large black fowl, whose cry is supposed ominous.

The raven himself is hoarse That croaks the fatal entrance of Duncan Under my battlements. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Come thou day in night, For thou wilt be upon the wings of night, Whiter than snow upon a raven's back. Shakespeare. I have been a perfectly white raven, as to bill as well as feathers. Boyle in Colours.

He made the greedy ravens to be Elias's caterers, and bring him food. King Charles.

On several parts a few rat praise bestows, The ruby lips, and well-proportion'd nose, The snowy skin, the raven's glossy hair, The dimpled cheek. Dryden's Cyman and Iphigenia.

The raven once in snowy plume was dress'd, White as the whitest dove's unfull'd breast, His tongue, his prating tongue had chang'd him quite

To sooty blackness from the purest white. Adison. Hence Gildon rails, that raven of the pit, Who thrives upon the carcasses of wit. Young.

To RAVEN. v. a. [hæpæn, Saxon, to rob.] To devour with great eagerness and rapacity.

Thirstless ambition that will raven up Thine own life's means. Shakespeare.

Our natures do pursue, Like rats that raven down their proper bane, A thirstly evil; and when we drink we die. Shakespeare.

The cloysed will That satiate, yet unsatiate desire, that rob Both fill'd and empty, ravening first the lamb, Longs after to the yrbage. Shakespeare's Cymbeline. There is a conspiracy of the prophets, like a roaring lion ravening the prey. Ezekiel, xxiii. 25.

To RAVEN. v. n. To prey with rapacity.

Benjamin shall raven as a wolf, in the morning he shall devour the prey, and at night he shall divide the spoil. Genesis.

They gaped upon me with their mouths, as a ravening and a roaring lion. Psalm cxi. 13.

The more they fed, they raven'd still for more, They drain'd from Dan, and left Beertheba poor; But when some by preferment fill by chance, The Gourmands made it their inheritance. Dryden.

Convulsions rack man's nerves and care his breast, His flying life is chas'd by raving pains

Through all his doubles in the winding reins. Blackmore.

RAVENOUS. adj. [from raven] Furiously voracious; hungry to rage.

Thy desires Are wolfish, bloody, starv'd, and ravenous. Shakespeare. As when a flock

Of ravenous fowl, though many a league remote, Against the day of battle, to a field Where arm'd he encamp'd come flying, lur'd With scent of living carcasses. Milton's Par. Lost.

What! the kind simena, That nurs'd me, watch'd my sickness! oh she watch'd me,

As ravenous vultures watch the dying lion. Smith.

RAVENOUSLY. adv. [from ravenous.] With raging voracity.

RAVENOUSNESS. n. s. [from ravenous.] Rage for prey; furious voracity.

The ravenousness of a lion or bear are natural to them; yet their mission upon an extraordinary occasion may be an actus imperatus of divine providence. Hale.

RAUGHT. the old pret. and part pass. of reach. Snatched; reached; attained.

His tail was stretched out in wondrous length, That to the house of heavenly gods it raught, And with extorted power and borrow'd strength, The ever-burning lamps from thence it brought. Spenser.

In like delights of bloody game, He trained was till tiper years he raught, And there abode whilst any beast of name Walk'd in that forest. Spenser.

This staff of honour raught, there let it stand, Where best it fits to be, in Henry's hand. Shakespeare. The hand of death has raught him. Shakespeare. Girtus furiously running in upon Schenden, violently raught from his head his rich cap of fables, and with his horsemen took him. Ku lles.

RAVIN. n. s. [from raven; this were better written ravenn.]

1. Prey; food gotten by violence.

The lion strangled for his honesty, and filled his holes with prey, and his dens with ravin. Nabum. To me, who with eternal famine pine, Alike is hell, or paradise, or heav'n; There best, where most with ravin I may meet. Milton.

2. Rapine; rapaciousness

They might not lie in a condition exposed to the ravin of any vermin that may find them, being unable to escape. Roy.

RAVINOLY. adv. [from rave.] With frenzy; with distraction.

To RAVISH. v. a. [ravir, French.]

1. To confusate by force; to deflower by violence.

They ravish'd the women and maids. Low. v. They cut thy sister's tongue, and ravish'd her. Shakespeare.

2. To take away by violence.

These hairs which thou dost ravish from my chin,

Will quicken and accuse thee. Shakespeare's King Lear. Their vow is made

To ransack Troy; within those strong immures The ravish'd Helen sleeps. Shakespeare.

His fire appear'd, And all his praise, to every syllable head; But then a rocket, in size more amplified, Then first he ravish'd to him. Chapman.

I owe myself the care, My fame and injur'd honour to repair; From thy own tent, proud man, in thy despite, This hand shall ravish thy pretended right. Dryden.

3. To delight to rapture; to transport.

Thou has ravish'd my heart. Cont. iv. 9. Be thou ravish'd always with her love. Proverbs.

RAVISHER. n. s. [ravisseur, French; from ravish.]

1. He that embraces a woman by violence.

They are cruel and bloody, common ravishers of women, and murderers of children. Spenser. A ravisher must repair the temporal detriment to the maid, and give her a dowry, or marry her if she desire it. Taylor. Turn hence those pointed glories of your eyes! For if more charms beneath those circles rise, So weak my virtue, they so strong appear, I shall turn ravisher to keep you here. Dryden.

2. One who takes any thing by violence.

Shall the ravisher display your hair, While the fops envy, and the ladies stare? Pope.

RAVISHU-

RA'VISHINGLY. adv. [from ravishing.]
To extremity of pleasure.

As all the housewives of delities are
To hear a voice so ravishingly fair. Chapman.

RA'VISHMENT. n. f. [ravissement, Fr. from ravish.]
1. Violation; forcible conspurcation.

Of his several ravishments, betrayings and stealing away of men's wives, came in all those ancient fables of his transformations and all that rabble of Grecian forgeries. Raleigh.

Tell them ancient stories of the ravishment of chaste maidens. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
I told them I was one of their knight-errants that delivered them from ravishment. Dryden.

2. Transport; rapture; ecstacy; pleasing violence on the mind.

All things joy, with ravishment
Attracted by thy beauty still to gaze. Milton.
Can any mortal mixture of earth's mould
Breathe such divine enchanting ravishment? Milton.

What a ravishment was that, when having found out the way to measure Hircio's crown, he leaped out of the bath, and, as if he were suddenly possessed, ran naked up and down! Wilkins.

RAW. adj. [Jipeap, Saxon; raa, Danish; rouw, Dutch.]

1. Not subdued by the fire.
Full of great lumps of flesh and gobbets raw. Spenser.

2. Not covered with the skin.
All about the wind doth blow,
And coughing drowns the parson's law;
And birds sit brooding in the snow,
And Marian's nose looks red and raw. Shakspeare.
If there be quick raw flesh in the ridings, it is an old leprosy. Leviticus, xiii. 10.

3. Sore.
This her knight was feeble and too faint,
And all his sinews waxen weak and raw
Through long imprisonment. Spenser.

4. Immature; unripe; not concocted.

5. Unseasoned; unripe in skill.
Some people very raw and ignorant, are very unworthily and untily nominated to places, when men of desert are held back and unpreferred. Raleigh's Essays.

People, while young and raw, and fitt-natured, are apt to think it an easy thing to gain love, and reckon their own friendship a sure price of another man's, but when experience shall have once opened their eyes, they will find that a friend is the gift of God. South.

Sails were spread to every wind that blew,
Raw were the sailors, and the depths were new. Dryden.

Well I knew
What perils youthful ardour would pursue,
Young as thou wert in dangers, raw to war. Dry.

6. New. This seems to be the meaning.
I have in my mind
A thousand raw tricks of these bragging jacks. Shakspeare.

7. Bleak; chill.
They carried always with them that weed, as their house, their bed, and their garment; and coming lastly into Ireland, they found there more special use thereof, by reason of the raw cold climate. Spenser's State of Ireland.
Youthful still in your doublet and hose, this raw rheumatick day. Shakspeare.

Once upon a raw and guffy day,
The troubled Tyber chafing with his shores. Shak.

8. Not decocted.
Distilled waters will last longer than raw waters. Bacon.

9. Not spun or twisted: as, raw silk.
RA'WRONED. adj. [raw and bone.] Having bones scarcely covered with flesh.

RA'WNESS. n. f. [from raw.]

1. State of being raw.
Chalk helpeth concoction, so it be out of a deep well; for then it cureth the rawness of the water. Bacon.

2. Unskilfulness.
Charles V. considering the rawness of his seamen, established a pilot major in their examination. Hakewill.

3. Hasty manner. This seems to be the meaning in this obscure passage
Why in that rawness left his wife and children, Without leave taking? Shakspeare's Macbeth.

RAY. n. f. [raie, rayon, French; radius, Latin.]

1. A beam of light.
These eyes that roll in vain
To find thy piercing ray, and find no dawn. Mit.
The least light, or part of light, which may be stoped alone, or do or suffer any thing alone, which the rest of the light doth not or suffers not, I call a ray of light. Newton.

Sol through white curtains shot a tim'rous ray,
And op'd those eyes that must eclipse the day. Pope.

2. Any lustre corporeal or intellectual.
The an sharpen'd his visual ray. Milton.
He now, observant of the parting ray,
Eyes the calm sunset of thy various day. Pope.

4. [Lolium, Latin.] An herb. Ainsworth.
To RAY. v. a. [raye, French; from the noun.] To break; to mark in long lines. An old word.

Beside a bubbling fountain low the lay,
Which she increased with her bleeding heart,
And the clean waves with purple gore did ray. Spenser.

His horse is rayed with the yellows. Shakspeare.
Was ever man so beaten? was ever man so rayed?
was ever man so weary? Shakspeare.

RAY. for array. Spenser.

RAZE. n. f. [rayz, a root, Spanish.] A root of ginger. This is commonly written race, but less properly.

I have a gammon of bacon and two razes of ginger to be delivered. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

To RAZE. v. a. [razer, French; rasa, Latin.] See RASE.

1. To overthrow; to ruin; to subvert.
Will you suffer a temple, how poorly built forever, but yet a temple of your deity, to be razed? Sidney.

He yolketh your rebellious necks,
Razeth your cities, and tubverts your towans. Shak.
It grieved the tyrant, that to bate a town should so long hold out, so that he would threaten to raze it. Knelso.
Sliced christian blood, and opulous cities raze;
Because they're taught to use some different phrase. Mallet.

We touch'd with joy
The royal hand that razed unhappy Troy. Dryden.
The place would be razed to the ground, and its foundations sown with salt. Addison's Spectator.

2. To efface.
Fatal this marriage; cancelling your fame,
Razing the characters of your renown. Shakspeare.
Pluck from the memory a rooted sorrow,
Raze out the written troubles of the brain. Shakspeare.

He in derision sets
Upon their tongues a various spirit, to raze
Quite out their native language; and instead,
To sow a jangling noise of words. Milton.

3. To extirpate.
I'll find a day to massacre them all,
And raze their faction and their family. Shakspeare.
RA'ZOR. n. f. [rafor, Latin.] A knife with a thick blade and fine edge used in shaving.

Zeal, except ordered aright, useth the razor with such eagerness, that the life of religion is thereby hazarded. Hickok.

These words are razors to my wounded heart. Shakspeare.

Those thy boist'rous locks, not by the sword
Of noble warrior, so to stain his honour,
But by the barber's razor best subdued. Milton.
Razor makers generally clip a small bar of Venice steel between two small bars of Flemish steel, and weld them together, to strengthen the back of the razor. Mason.

As in smooth oil the razor best is whet,
So wit is by politeness sharpest set:
Their want of edge from their offence is seen;
Both pain us least when exquisitely keen. Young.

RAZORS of a boar. A bear's tusks.
RA'ZOURABLE. adj. [from razor.] Fit to be shaved. Not in use.

New born chins be rough and razourable. Shak.

RA'ZORFISH. n. f.
The sheath or razorfish resembleth in length and bigness a man's finger. Crisp.

RA'ZURE. n. f. [rasure, French; rasura, Latin.] Act of crasing.

Oh! your desert speaks loud;
It will deliver with characters of bias
A forced residence, 'gainst the tooth of time
And razure of oblivion. Shakspeare.

RE. Is an inseparable particle used by the Latins, and from them borrowed by us to denote iteration or backward action: as, return, to come back; to revive, to live again; repercussion, the act of driving back: reciprocation, as, to recriminate. It is put almost arbitrarily before verbs and verbal nouns, so that many words so compounded will perhaps be found, which it was not necessary to infer. It sometimes adds little to the simple meaning of the word, as in rejoice.

REACCE'SS. n. f. [re and access.] Visit renewed.

Let pass the quailing and withering of all things by the recess, and their reviving by the reaccess of the sun. Hakewill.

To REACH. v. a. ancient preterite raught. [racan, Saxon.]

1. To touch with the hand extended.
Round the tree

They longing stood, but could not reach. Milton.
What are riches, empire, power,
But larger means to gratify the will;
The steps by which we climb to life and reach
Our wish, and that obtained, down with a scaffolding
Of scepters, crowns and thrones: they've seiz'd their end,
And there like lumber to be left and scorn'd? Conf's rage.

2. To arrive at; to attain any thing distant; to strike from a distance.

The coast so long desir'd

Thy troops shall reach, but having reach'd, repent.

Dryden.

What remains I evend thus, we have no more a positive notion of, than a mariner has of the depth of the sea; where, having let down his sounding line, he is at the bottom.

Locke.

It would last perhaps before this letter reaches your hands.

Pope.

3. To strike from a distant place.

O pat on my, thy present aid afford,
That I may reach the boat!

Dryden.

4. To fetch from some place distant, and give.

He reached me a full cup. 2 Ephes. xiv. 39.

5. To bring forward from a distant place.

Reach nether thy finger, and behold my hands;
And reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side.

John. xx. 27.

6. To hold out; to stretch forth.

These kinds of goodness are so nearly united to the things which define them, that we scarcely perceive the appetite to stir in reaching forth her hand towards them.

Hooker.

7. To attain; to gain; to obtain.

The best accounts of the appearances of nature, which human penetration can reach, come short of its reality.

Cryne.

8. To transfer.

Through such hands

The knowledge of the gods is reach'd to man.

Rom.

9. To penetrate to.

Whatever alterations are made in the body, if they reach not the mind, there is no perception.

Locke.

10. To be adequate to.

The law reached the intention of the promoters, and this act fix'd the natural price of money. To be. If these examples of grown men reach not the case of children, let them examine.

Locke.

11. To extend to.

Thy desire leads to no excess that reaches blame.

Milton.

Her imprecations reach not to the tomb,

They shut not out society in death. Addison's Caro.

12. To extend; to spread abroad.

Trees reach'd too far their pamper'd boughs.

Milton.

13. To take in the hand.

Let him reach of the tree of life, and eat. Milton.

TO REACH. v. n.

1. To be extended.

We hold that the power which the church hath lawfully to make laws, doth extend unto sundry things of ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and such other matters whereto their opinion is, that the church's authority and power doth not reach.

Hooker.

The new world reaches quite across the world gone in one topic to the other.

Boyle.

When men pursue their thoughts of space, they are apt to stop at the confines of body, as if space were there at an end too, and reach'd no farther.

Locke.

If I do not ask any thing improper, let me be housed by Theodosius; my vow reaches no farther than the grave.

Addison.

The influence of the stars reaches to many events, which are not to the power of reason.

Dryden.

2. To be extended far.

Great men have reaching hands. Shakespeare.

3. To penetrate.

He hath delivered them into your hand, and ye have slay'd them in a rage, that reaches up into heaven.

2 Chron. xiv. 14.

We reach forward into futurity, and bring up to our thoughts objects laid in the remote depths of time.

Addison.

To make efforts to attain.

With a fallow always supply new line, and find the plummet sink without stopping, he would be in the posture of the mind, reaching after a positive idea of infinity.

Locke.

REACH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Act of touching or seizing by extension of the hand.

2. Power of reaching or taking in the hand.

There may be in a man's reach, a book containing pictures and discourse, capable to delight and instruct him, which yet he may never have the will to open.

Locke.

3. Power of attainment or management.

In actions within the reach of power in him, a man is as free as it is possible for freedom to make him.

Locke.

4. Power; limit of faculties.

Our sight may be considered as a more diffusive kind of touch, that brings into our reach some of the most remote parts of the universe.

Addison.

Be sure yourself and your own reach to know,
How far your genius, taste, and learning go.

Pope.

5. Contrivance; artful scheme; deep thought.

Drawn by others, who had deeper reaches than themselves to matters which they least intended.

Hayward.

Some, under types, have affected obscurity to amuse and make themselves admired for profound reaches.

6. A fetch; an artifice to attain some distant advantage.

The duke of Parma had particular reacher and ends of his own underhand, to cross the design.

Bacon.

7. Tendency to distant consequences.

Strain not my speech

To grosser issues, nor to larger reach,

Than to suspicion. Shakespeare's Othello.

8. Extent.

The confines met of empyrean heav'n,
And of this world; and on the left hand, hell
With long reach interpos'd. Milton's Paradise I. st.

TO REACT. v. a. [re and act.] To return the impulse or impression.

The lungs being the chief instrument of sanguification, and acting strongly upon the chyle to bring it to an animal fluid, must be reacted upon as strongly.

Arbutnot.

Cut off your hand, and you may do
With t' other hand, the work of two;
Because the soul her power contracts,
And on the brother limb reacts. Swift's Miscel.

REACTION. n. f. [reaction, French; from react.] The reciprocation of any impulse or force impressed, made by the body on which such impression is made: action and reaction are equal.

Do not great bodies conserve their heat the longest, their part heating one another; and may not great, dense, and fixed bodies, when heated beyond a certain degree, emit light so copiously, as, by the emission and reaction of its light, and the reflections and refractions of its rays, within its pores, to grow still hotter till it comes to a certain period of heat, such as is that of the sun?

Alimentary substances, of a mild nature, act with small force upon the solids, and as the action and reaction are equal, the smallest degree of force in the solids digests them.

Arbutnot.

READ. n. f. [nab, Saxon; read, Dutch.]

1. Counsel.

The man is blest that hath not lent

To wicked read his ear.

Sternhold.

2. Saying; saw. This word is in both senses obsolete.

These puissant legions, whose exile Hath empty'd heav'n, shall fail to reascend, Self-raisd, and repossess their native seat. Milton.

TO REASCEND. v. a. To mount again.

When the god his fury had allay'd, He mounts aloft, and reascends the skies. Addison.

REA'SON. n. f. [raison, French; ratio, Latin.]

1. The power by which man deduces one proposition from another, or proceeds from premises to consequences; the rational faculty; discursive power.

Raison is the director of man's will, discovering in action what is good; for the laws of well-doing are the dictates of right reason. Hooker.

Though brutish that contest and foul, When reason hath to deal with force, yet so Most reason is that reason overcome. Milton.

I appeal to the common judgment of mankind, whether the humane nature be not so firm'd, as to acquiesce in such a moral certainty, as the nature of things is capable of; and if it were otherwise, whether that reason which belongs to us, would not prove a burden and a torment to us, rather than a privilege, by keeping us in a continual suspense, and thereby rendering our conditions perpetually restless and unquiet. Hobbes.

Dim, as the borrow'd beams of moon and stars To lonely, weary, wandering travellers, Is reason to the soul: and as on high, Those rowling fires discover both the sky, Not light us here, so reason's glimmering ray Was lent, not to assure our doubtful way, But guide us upward to a better day. Dryden.

It would be well, if people would not lay so much weight on their own reason in matters of religion, as to think every thing impossible and absurd, which they cannot conceive. how often do we contradict the right rules of reason in the whole course of our lives? reason itself is true and just, but the reason of every particular man is weak and wavering, perpetually sway'd and turned by his interests, his passions, and his vices. Swift.

2. Cause; ground or principle.

What the apostles deemed rational and probable means to that end, there is no reason or probability to think should ever in any produce this effect. Hammond.

Virtue and vice are not arbitrary things, but there is a natural and eternal reason for that goodness and virtue, and against vice and wickedness. Tillotson.

3. Cause efficient.

Spain is thus sown of people, partly by reason of the fertility of the soil, and partly their natives are exhausted by so many employments in such vast territories as they possess. Bacon.

Such a benefit, as by the antecedent will of Christ is intended to all men living, though all men, by reason of their own demerits, do not actually receive the fruit of it. White.

The reason of the motion of the balance in a wheel watch, is by the motion of the next wheel. Hale.

By reason of the sickness of a reverend prelate, I have been over-ruled to approach this place. Apollon.

I have not observed equality of numbers in my verse; partly by reason of my haste, but more especially because I would not have my sense a slave to syllables. Dryden.

4. Final cause.

Reason, in the English language, sometimes is taken for true and clear principles, sometimes for clear and fair deductions; sometimes for the cause, particularly the final cause. Locke.

5. Argu-

5. Argument; ground of persuasion; motive.

I mark the business from the common eye
For sundry weighty reasons. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

If it be natural, ought we not rather to conclude, that there is some ground and reason for these tears, and that nature hath not planted them in us to no purpose? Tillotson.

If we commemorate any mystery of our redemption;
of article of our faith, we ought to confirm our belief of it, by considering all those reasons upon which it is built, that we may be able to give a good account of the hope that is in us. Nelson.

6. Ratiocination; discursive act.

When the rates things, and moves from ground to ground,

The name of reason she obtains by this;
But when by reason she the truth hath found,
And standeth fixt, she understanding is. Davies.

7. Clearness of faculties.

Lovers and madmen have their seething brains,
Such shaping fantasies that apprehend
More than cool reason ever comprehends. Shakespeare.

When valour preys on reason,
It eats the sword it fights with. Shakespeare.

8. Right; justice.

I was promis'd on a time,
To have reason for my rhyme:
From that time unto this season,
I receiv'd nor rhyme nor reason. Spenser.

—Ay, and resolv'd withal
To do myself thus reason and this tight. Shakespeare.
The papists ought in reason to allow them all the excuses they make use of for themselves; such as an invincible ignorance, oral tradition and authority. Stillinger.

Let it drink deep in thy most vital part;
Strike home, and do me reason in thy heart. Dryden.

9. Reasonable claim; just practice.

God brings good out of evil, and therefore it were but reason we should trust God to govern his own world, and wait till the change cometh, or the reason be discovered. Taylor.

Conscience, not Acting by law, is a boundless presumptuous thing, and for any one, by virtue thereof, to challenge himself a privilege of doing what he will, and of being unaccountable, is in all reason too much, either for man or angel. South.

A severe reflection Montaigne has made on princes, that we ought not in reason to have any expectations of favour from them. Dryden.

We have as great assurance that there is a God, as the nature of the thing to be proved is capable of, and as we could in reason expect to have.

When any thing is proved by as good arguments as a thing of that kind is capable of, we ought not in reason to doubt of its existence. Tillotson.

10. Rationale; just account.

This reason did the ancient fathers render, why the church was called Catholick. Parryson.

To render a reason of an effect or phenomenon, is to deduce it from something else more known than itself. Boyle.

11. Moderation; moderate demands.

The most probable way of bringing France to reason, would be by the making an attempt upon the Spanish West Indies, and by that means to cut off all communication with this great source of riches. Addison.

To REASON. v. n. [raisonner, French.]

1. To argue rationally; to deduce consequences justly from premises.

No man, in the strength of the first grace, can merit the second, for reason they do not, who think so; unless a beggar by receiving one alms, can merit another. South.

Ideas, as ranked under names, are those, that for the most part men reason of within themselves, and always those which they commune about with others. Locke.

Every man's reasoning and knowledge is only about the ideas existing in his own mind; and our knowledge and reasoning about other things is only as they correspond with those our particular ideas. Locke.

Love is not to be reason'd down, or lost
In high ambition. Addison.

In the lonely grove,
'Twas there just and good he reason'd strong, Clear'd some great truth, or rais'd some furious song. Takell.

2. To debate; to discourse; to talk; to take or give an account. Not in use.

Reason with the fellow,
Before you punish him, where he heard this. Steele.
I reason'd with a Frenchman yesterday,
Who told me in the rump of seas,
There miscarried a vessel of our country. Shakespeare.
Stand still, that I may reason with you of all the righteous acts of the Lord. 1 Samuel, xiii. 7.

3. To raise disquisitions; to make inquiries.

Jesus, perceiving their thoughts, said, what reason ye in your hearts? Luke, v. 22.

They reason'd high
Of providence, foreknowledge, will, and fate. Milton.
Down reason then, at least vain reasoning down.

To REASON. v. a. To examine rationally. This is a French mode of speech.

When they are clearly discovered, well digested, and well reason'd in every part, there is beauty in such a theory. Burnet.

REASONABLE. adj. [raison, French.]

1. Having the faculty of reason; endued with reason.

She perceived her only son lay hurt, and that his hurt was so deadly, as that already his life had lost use of the reasonable and almost sensible parts. Shenstone.

2. Acting; speaking, or thinking rationally.

The parliament was dissolved, and gentlemen furnished with such force, as were held sufficient to hold in bundle either the malice or rage of reasonable people. Haywood.

3. Just; rational; agreeable to reason.

By indubitable certainty, I mean that which doth not admit of any reasonable cause of doubting, which is the only certainty of which most things are capable. Wilkins.

A law may be reasonable in itself, although a man does not allow it, or does not know the reason of the law-givers. Swift.

4. Not immoderate.

Let all things be thought upon,
That may with reasonable twitfulness add
More feathers to our wings. Shakespeare's Henry V.

5. Tolerable; being in mediocrity.

I could with reasonable good manner receive the salutation of her and of the prince's Pamela, doing them yet no further reverence than one prince's oweth to another. Sidney.

A good way distant from the nigra rupes, there are four several kinds of reasonable quantity. Abbot.
Notwithstanding these defects, the English colonies maintained themselves in a reasonable good estate, as long as they retained their own ancient laws. Darwin on Ireland.

REASONABLENESS. n. s. [from reasonable.]

1. The faculty of reason.

2. Agreeableness to reason.

They thought the work would be better done, if those, who had satisfied themselves with the reasonableness of what they wish, would undertake the converting and disposing of other men. Clarendon.

He that rightly understands the reasonableness and excellency of charity, will know, that it can never be excusable to waste any of our money in pride and folly. Lowe.

3. Compliance with reason.

The passive reason, which is more properly reasonat'ness, is that order and congruity which is impressed upon the thing thus wrought, as in a watch, the whole frame and contexture of it carries a reasonableness in it, the passive impression of the reason or intellectual idea that was in the artist. Hale.

4. Moderation.

REASONABLY. adv. [from reasonable.]

1. Agreeably to reason.

Chaucer makes Arcite violent in his love, and unjust in the pursuit of it; yet when he came to die, he made him think more reasonably. Dryden.

The church has formerly had eminent saints in that sex; and it may reasonably be thought, that it is purely owing to their poor and vain education, that the honour of their sex is for the most part confined to former ages. Lowe.

2. Moderately; in a degree reaching to mediocrity.

Some man reasonably studied in the law, should be persuaded to go thither as chancellor. Bacon.

If we can by industry make our deaf and dumb persons reasonably perfect in the language and pronunciation, he may be also capable of the same privilege of understanding by the eye what is spoken.

Holmes's Elements of Speech.

REASONER. n. s. [raisonneur, French; from reason.] One who reasons; an arguer.

Due reverence pay
To learned Epicurus, see the way
By which this reasoner of to high renown
Moves through th' ecliptic road the rolling sun. Blackmore.

The terms are loose and undefined; and what less, becomes a true reasoner, he puts wrong and in-vidious names on every thing to colour a false way of arguing. Addison.

Those reasoners, who employ so much of their zeal for the upholding the balance of power in Christendom, by their practices are endeavouring to destroy it at home. Swift.

REASONING. n. s. [from reason Argument.

Those who would make use of solid argumentation and strong reasonings to a reader of so delicate a turn, would be like that foolish people, who worshipped a fly, and sacrificed an ox to it. Addison.

Our reasonings therefore on this head, amount only to what the schools call ignoratio elenchy; proving before the question, on talking wide of the purpose. Waterland.

REASONLESS. adj. [from reason.] Void of reason.

This proffer is absurd and reasonless. Shakespeare.

Is it
Her true perfection, or my false transgression,
That make me reasonless to reason thus? Shakespeare.

That they wholly direct the reasonless mind, I am resolv'd, for all those which were created mortal, as birds and beasts, are left to their natural appetites. Raleigh's History of the World.

These reasons in love's law have pass'd for good,
Though fond and reasonless to some. Milton.

He to him leapt, in mind to reave his life. Spenser.
Some make his meatly bed, but reave his rest.

Cicero.
But these men, knowing, having heard the voice
Of God, by some means, that his oath hath rejt
The ruler here, will never suffer lest Their unjust wrong of his wife. Chapman.

Who can be bound by any solemn vow,
To do a murderous deed, to rob a man,
To force a spotless virgin's chastity,
To reave the orphan of his patrimony,
And have no other reason for his wrong,
But that he was bound by a solemn oath? Shakespeare.
2. It was used as well in a good as bad sense.

They sought my troubled sense how to decieve
With talk, that might inquiet fancy reave. Spenser.
Each succeeding time addeth on reave's goings and evils, according to the occasions itself produceth. Cicero.

With profits of the mind, study and fast. Shakespeare.
The icy goat, the crak which square the scales;
With those of aries true content to hate
The scales of libra, and her rays rebat. Cresc.

He modifies his first severe decree;
The keener edge of battle to rebat,
The troops for honour fighting, not for hate. Dryden.
My flagging soul flies under her own pitch,
My senses too are dull and slipp'd,
Their edge rebat. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

Their low centre unfeign'd long joys afford
To the honest nuptial bed, and, in the war
Of life, rebat the miseries of age. Pelops.

REBECK. n. s. [rebec, French; ribecca

All our invectives at their supposed errors, fall back with a rebounded force upon our own real ones. Deacy of Pitt.

Silenus sung, the vales his voice rebound,
And carry to the skies the sacred sound. Dryden.
Prior has used it improperly.

Flows, by the soft South West
Open'd, and gather'd by religious hands,
Rebound their sweets from th' odorous pavement.

Prior.
REBOUND. n. s. [from the verb.] The act of flying back in consequence of motion resisted; reflection.

I do feel,
By the rebound of yours, a grief that shoots
My very heart. Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

If you strike a ball idelong, not full upon the surface, the rebound will be as much the contrary way; whether there be any such resilience in echoes may be tried. Edwards.

The weapon with unerring fury flew,
At his left shoulder aim'd: nor entrance found;
But back, as from a rock, with swift rebound Harmless return'd. Dryden.

REBUFF. n. s. [rebuffade, Fr. rebuffe, the verdict of the twelve men empan-nelled upon an affize. Cowell.

The English should not marry with any Irish, unless bound by recognisance, with sureties, to continue loyal. Dryden.

TO RECOGNISE. v. a. [recognosco, Lat.]

1. To acknowledge; to recover and avow knowledge of any person or thing.

He brought several of them, even under their own hands, to recognise their sense of their undue procedure used by them unto him. Fell.

The British cannon formidably roars,
While starting from his oozy bed,
Th' asserted ocean rears his reverend head,
To view and recognise his ancient lord. Dryden.

Then first he recognis'd th' æthereal guest,
Wonder and joy alternate fire his breast. Pope.

Speak, valiant, recognise thy foreign queen;
Hast thou ne'er seen me? know'st thou not me seen? Harte.

2. To review; to re-examine.

However their causes spread in your tribunals,
Christ will recognise them at a greater. Souib.

RECOGNISEE. n. f. He in whose favour the bond is drawn.

RECOGNISOR. n. f. He who gives the recognisance.

RECOGNITION. n. f. [recognitio, Latin.]

1. Review; renovation of knowledge.

The virtues of some being thought expedient to be annually had in remembrance, brought in a fourth kind of publick setting, whereby the lives of such saints had, at the time of their yearly memorial, solemn recognition in the church of God. Hooker.

2. Knowledge confess'd.

Every species of fancy hath three modes. recognition of a thing, as present, memory of it, as past; and forethought of it, as to come. Glanville.

3. Acknowledgment; memorial.

The Israelites in Moses' days were redeemed out of Egypt, in memory and recognition when they were commanded to observe the weekly sabbath. White.

If the recognition or acknowledgment of a final concord, upon joy writ of covenant finally, be taken by justice of affize, and the yearly value of those lands be declared by affidavit made before the same justice; then is the recognition and value signed with the hand-writing of that justice. Bac.

TO RECOIL. v. n. [recoil, French.]

1. To rush back in consequence of resistance, which cannot be overcome by the force impressed.

The very thought of my revenges that way
Recoil upon me; in himself too mighty. Shakspeare.
Revenge, at first though sweet,
Bitter ere long, back on itself recoils. Milton.

Amazement seiz'd
All th' host of heav'n, back they recoil'd, afraid
At first. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Evil on itself shall back recoil.
Who in deep mines for hidden knowledge toils,
Like guns o'ercharg'd, breaks, misses, or recoils. Denham.

My hand's so soft, his heart so hard,
The blow recoils, and hurts me while I strike!

Dryden
Whatever violence may be offered to nature, by endeavouring to reason men into a contrary persuasion, nature will still recoil, and at last return to itself. Tillotson.

2. To fall back.

Ye both forewarn'd be; therefore a while
I read you rest, and to your bowers recoil. Spenser.

Ten paces huge
He back recoil'd; the teeth on bended knee,
His massy spear upitay'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. To fail; to shrink.

A good and virtuous nature may recoil
In an imperial charge. Shakspeare's Macbeth.
RECOIL. n. f. [from the verb.] A falling back.

TO RECOIN. v. a. [re and coin.] To coin over again.

Among the Romans, to preserve great events upon their coins, when any particular piece of money grew very scarce, it was often recoined by a succeeding emperor. Addy.

RECOINAGE. n. f. [re and coinage.] The act of coining anew.

The mint gained upon the late statute, by the recoinage of groats and half-groats; now twelve-pences and sixpences. Bacon.

TO RECOLLECT. v. a. [recollektus,
Latin.]

1. To recover to memory.

It did relieve my passion much;
More than light airs and recollected terms
Of these most brisk and giddy-paced times. Shakspeare.
Recollect every day the things seen, heard, or read, which made any addition to your understanding. Watts's Logic.

2. To recover reason or resolution.

The Tyrian queen
Admir'd his fortunes, more admir'd the man;
Then recollected stood. Dryden's Æneis.

3. To gather what is scattered; to gather again.

Now that God hath made his light radiate in his word, men may recollect those scattered divine beams, and kindling with them the topics proper to warm our affections, enliven holy zeal. Boyle.

RECOLLECTION. n. f. [from recollect.]

Recovery of notion; revival in the memory.

Recollection is when any idea is sought after by the mind, and with pain and endeavour found, and brought again in view. Locke.

Finding the recollection of his thoughts disturb'd his sleep, he remitted the particular care of the composition. Fell.

Let us take care that we sleep not without such a recollection of the actions of the day as may repent any thing that is remarkable, as matter of sorrow or thanksgiving. Laylar.

The last image of that troubled heap,
When sense subsides, and fancy sports in sleep,
Though past the recollection of the thought,
Becomes the stuff of which our dream is wrought.

Pope.
TO RECOMFORT. v. a. [re and comfort.]

1. To comfort or console again.

What place is there left, we may hope our woes to recomfort? Sidney.
Ne'er through an arch so hurried the blown tide,
As the recomforted through th' gates. Shakspeare.

As one from sad dismay Recomforted, and after thoughts disturb'd, Submitting to what seem'd remediless. Milton.

2. To give new strength.

In strawberries, it is usual to help the ground with muck; and likewise to recomfort it sometimes with muck put to the roots; but to water with muck water is not practised. Bacon.

TO RECOMMENCE. v. a. [recommencer, French; re and commence.] To begin anew.

TO RECOMMEND. v. a. [recommender, French; re and commend.]

1. To praise to another; to advance by praise to the kindness of another.

Mecenas recommended Virgil and Horace to Augustus, whose praises helped to make him popular while a live, and after his death have made him precious to posterity. Dryden.

2. To make acceptable.

A decent boldness ever meets with friends,
Succeeds, and ev'n a stranger recommends. Pope.

3. To commit with prayers.

They had been recommended to the grace of God.
Acts, xiv.

RECOMMENDABLE. adj. [recommendabile, French; from recommend.] Worthy of recommendation or praise.

Though these pursuits should make out no pretence to advantage, yet, upon the account of honour, they are recommendable. Glanville.

RECOMMENDATION. n. f. [recommendation, French; from recommend.]

1. The act of recommending.

2. That which secures to one a kind reception from another.

Poplicola's doors were opened on the outside, to save the people even the common civility of asking entrance; where misfortune was a powerful recommendation.

meditation; and where want itself was a powerful mediation. Dryden.

RECOMMENDATORY. adj. [from recommend] That which commends to another.

Verbs re commend, &c. they have commanded me to peruse this new book. Swift.

RECOMMENDER. n. f. [from recommend] One who recommends.

St. Chrysostom, as great a lover and recommender of the military life as he was, declined it to be no proper seal for those who are to be leaders of Christ's flock. Archbishop.

TO RECOMMEND. v. a. [re and commen-]
To commit anew.

When they had bailed the twelve bishops, who were in the tower, the house of commons expostulated with them, and caused them to be re-committed.
Clarendon.

TO RECOMPACT. v. a. [re and compact.]
To join anew.

And recompact my scattered body. Dorm.

TO RECOMPENSE. v. a. [recompens, Fr.
re and compens, Latin.]

1. To repay; to requite.
Continue faithful, and we will recompense you.
1 Ma. x.

Hear from heaven, and requite the wicked, by recompensing his way upon his own head. 2 Chron.

2. To give in requital.
Thou wast begot of them, and how canst thou recompense them the things they have done for thee?
Ecclus. viii. 28.

Recompense to no man evil for evil. Rom. xii. 17.

3. To compensate; to make up by something equivalent.
French wheat, which is bearded, requirerh the best soil, recompensing the same with a profitable plenty. Carew.

Solyman, willing them to be of good cheer, find that he would in short time find occasion for them to recompense that disgrace, and again to shew them approved valour. Kyd.

He is long ripening, but then his maturity, and the complement thereof, recompenseth the slowness of his maturation. Hall.

4. To redeem; to pay for.
If the man have no kinsman to recompense the trespass unto, let it be recompensed unto the Lord.
Numbers, v. 8.

RECOMPENSE. n. f. [recompense, French;
from the verb.]

1. Reward; something given as an ac-knowledgegment of merit.
Thou'lt thou be so long,
Thy faithful wife, whose recompense is bound To overtake thee. Shakespeare.

2. Equivalent; compensation.
With men thought the vast outrage on this tuning and integrity as an recompense for any inconvenience in their past life. Chandos.

*Your mother's room is a recompense, shall me
I have respect to my daughter's feet.* Dryden.

RECOMPENSMENT. n. f. [re and compen- sment.] New compensation.

Although I had a purpose to make a part to redempt or recompensment of the mass, I laid it aside.
Bacon.

TO RECOMPOSE. v. a. [recompose, Fr.
re and compose.]

1. To settle or quiet anew.
Lynch was so transported, that he could not receive answer from God, till by music he was reposed. Taylor.

2. To form or adjust anew.
We produced a lovely purple, which we approach to colour as at pleasure, by drawing or re-approaching the edges of the two tints. Boyle.

RECOMPOSITION. n. f. [re and composi- tion.] Composition renewed.

TO RECONCILE. v. a. [reconciler, Fr.
reconcilio, Latin.]

1. To make to like again.
This noble passion,
Child of integrity, hath from my soul
Wip'd the black scruples, reconcil'd my thoughts
To thy good truth and honour. Shakespeare.

*Submit to Caesar,
And re-mend thy mighty soul to life.* Adrian.

Contending minds to reconcile. Swift.

He that has accustomed himself to take up with what easily offends itself, has reason to fear he shall never reconcile himself to the fatigue of turning things in his mind, to discover their more retired secrets. Locke.

2. To make to be liked again.
Many wise men, who knew the treasurer's talent in removing prejudice, and reconciling himself to wavering abstractions, believed the lot of the duke was unsatisfactory. Clarendon.

3. To make any thing consistent.
The great men among the ancients understood how to reconcile manual labour with affairs of state.
Locke.

Questions of right and wrong,
Which through our consciences have reconcil'd,
My learning cannot answer. Southern.

*Some figures monstrous and mishap'd appear, Consider'd singly, or beheld too near,
Which but proportion'd to their light or place,
Due distance reconciles to form and grace.* Pope.

4. To restore to favour.
So thou shalt do for every one that erreth and is simple, so shall ye reconcile the house. Emakul.

Let him live before thee reconcil'd. Milton.

RECONCILABLE. adj. [reconcilable, Fr.
from reconcile.]

1. Capable of renewed kindness.

2. Consistent; possible to be made consistent.

What we did was against the dictates of our own conscience; and consequently never makes that act reconcilable with a regenerate estate, which otherwise would not be so. Hammond.

The different accounts of the numbers of ships are reconcilable, by supposing that some spoke of the men of war only, and others added the transports. Aburbr.

The most convenient, ought to have been as long, as was reconcilable with sufficient strength. Chene.

Worldly affairs and recreations may hinder our attendance upon the worship of God, and are not reconcilable with solemn assemblies. Nichol.

RECONCILIABLENESS. n. f. [from re- concilable.]

1. Concurrence; possibility to be reconciled.

The cylinder is a lifeless trunk, which hath nothing of choice or will in it, and therefore cannot be a fit resemblance to shew the reconcilableness of fate with choice. Hammond.

Differing how the several parts of scripture are fitted to several times, persons and occurrences, we shall discover not only a reconcilableness, but a friendship and perfect harmony betwixt texts, that here seem most at variance. Boyle.

2. Disposition to renew love.

RECONCILEMENT. n. f. [from reconcile.]

1. Reconciliation, renewal of kindness; favour restored.

Injury went beyond all degree of reconcilement.
Sidney.

*Creature so faint his reconcilement seeking,
Whom she had displac'd.* Milton's Paradise Lost.

On one side great revenge, and very great resentment on the other, have enflamed animosities, so as to make all reconcilement impracticable. Swift.

2. Friendship renewed.

No cloud
Of anger shall remain; but peace assur'd
And reconcilement. Milton's Paradise Lost.

RECONCILER. n. f. [from reconcile.]

1. One who renews friendship between others.
He not only attained his purpose of uniting distant parties unto each other, but, contrary to the usual fate of reconcilers, gained them to himself.
Fill.

2. One who discovers the consistence between propositions.
Part of the world I now how to accommodate St. James and St. Paul, better than some late re-concilers. Hobbs.

RECONCILIATION. n. f. [reconciliatio, from re and concilio, Latin; reconcilia- tion, French.]

1. Renewal of friendship.

2. Agreement of things seemingly opposite; solution of seeming contrarieties.
These distinctions of the fear of God give us a clear and easy notion of their seeming inconsistency of scripture, with respect to this at-fection. Locke.

3. Atonement; expiation.
He might be a merciful and faithful high priest to make reconciliation for him. Hebrews, ix. 11.

TO RECONDENSE. v. a. [re and condense.]
To condense anew.

In the heads of stills and necks of colubins, such vapours quickly are by a very little cold re-order'd into water. Boyle.

RECONDITE. adj. [reconditus, Latin.]
Secret; profound; abstruse.

A disagreement between thought and expression seldom happens, but among men of more record studies and deep learning. Felt.

TO RECONDUCE. v. a. [reconduci, Fr.
reconducere, Latin; re and conducere.]
To conduct again.

Wander'st thou wilt in this lucid orb,
And stray'd from those far fields of light above,
Amidst this new creation want'st a guide,
To reconduct thy steps? Dryden's St. Patrick's Hymn.

TO RECONJOIN. v. a. [re and conjoin.]
To join anew.

Some liquors, although colourless themselves, when elevated into exhalations, exhibit a conspicuous colour, which they lose again when reconjoined into a liquor. Boyle.

TO RECONQUER. v. a. [reconquerer, Fr.
re and conquer.] To conquer again.

Chaateron undertook to reconquer Ogiel.
Dennis.

TO RECONVENE. v. n. [re and convene.]
To assemble anew.

A work accident fell out about the time of the two houses reconvening, which made a wonderful impression. Clarendon.

TO RECONSECRATE. v. a. [re and con- secrate.] To consecrate anew.

If a church should be consumed by fire, it shall,
in such a case, be re-consecrated. Aylmer's Paragon.

TO RECONVEY. v. a. [re and convey.]
To convey again.

As rivers lost in seas, some secret vein
Thence reconveys, there to be lost again. Danham.

TO RECORD. v. a. [recondor, Latin;
recorder, Fr.]

1. To register any thing, so that its memory may not be lost.
I made him my book, where my soul recorded
The history of all my secret thoughts. Shakespeare.

*He shall record a gift
Here in the court, of all he dies possess'd, Unto his son Lorenzo.* Shakespeare.

Those things that are recorded of him and his impiety, are written in the chronicles. 1 Esdras, i.
I call

I call heaven and earth to record this day against you, that I have set before you life and death.

Deut. xxi. 20.

They gave complex ideas names, that they might the more easily record and discourse of those things they were daily conversant in. Locke.

2. To celebrate; to cause to be remembered solemnly.

So every morn recorded the third day. Milton.

3. To recite, to repeat; perhaps to tune. Out of use.

They long'd to see the day, to hear the lark
Record her hymns, and chant her carols blest.

Fanfax.

RECORD. n. s. [record, French; from the verb. The accent of the noun is indifferently on either syllable; of the verb always on the last.] Register; authentick memorial.

Is it upon record or else reported Successively, from age to age? Shakspeare.

It cannot be

The Volscians dare break with us.

—We have record that very well it can;

And this example of the like have been. Shakspeare.

The king made a record of these things; and Manducheus wrote thereof. Ezra, xii. 4.

An ark, and in the ark his testimony,

The records of his covenant. Milton.

Of such a goddels no time leaves record,

Who burn'd the temple where she was ador'd.

Dryden.

If he allows such a monarchy continued to the flood, I would know what records he has it from.

Locke.

Though the attested copy of a record be good proof, yet the copy of a copy never will attested will not be admitted as a proof in judicature. Locke.

Thy elder book, great Janus' calf

Into the long records of ages past,

Review the years in furthest action dress'd. Prior.

RECORDATION. n. s. [recordatio, Lat.]

Remembrance. Not in use.

I never shall have length of life enough,

To rain upon remembrance with mine eyes,

That it may glow and spout as high as heav'n

For recordation to my noble husband. Shakspeare.

Make a recordation to my soul

Of every syllable that here was spoke. Shakspeare.

A man of the primitive temper, when the church

by its virtues did flourish in high examples, which I have imitated as a recordation of his virtues, having been much oblig'd to him for many favours.

Warton.

RECORDER. n. s. [from record]

1. One whose business is to register any events.

I but your recorder am in this,

Or mouth and speaker of the universe,

A useful notary; for 'tis

Not I, but you and fate that make the verse. Deane.

2. The keeper of the rolls in a city.

I ask'd, what meant this wilful silence?

His answer was, the people were not us'd

To be spoke to except by the recorder. Shakspeare.

The office of recorder to this city being vacant,

five or six persons are soliciting to succeed him.

Dryden.

3. A kind of flute; a wind instrument.

The shepherd went among them, and sing an eclogue, while the other shepherd, pulling out recorders, which possess the place of pipes, accorded then musick to the others voice. Saunders.

In a recorder, the three uppermost holes yield one tone, which is a note lower than the tone of the first three. Bacon.

The figures of recorders, and flutes and pipes are frequent; but the recorder hath a less bore and a greater above and below. Eaton.

To RECOUCH. v. u. [re and couch] To lie down again.

Thou mak'st the night to overvail the day;

Then lions whelps lie roaring for their prey;

And at thy powerful hand demand their food;

Who when at morn they all recouch again,

Then toiling man till eve pursues his pain. Warton.

To RECOVER. v. a. [recouarer, Fr.

recupero, Lat.]

1. To restore from sickness or disorder.

Would my Lord were with the prophet; for he would recover him of his Leprosy. 1 Kings, v. 3.

The clouds dispell'd, the sky return'd her light,

And nature flood recover'd her bright. Dryden.

2. To repair.

Should we apply this precept only to those who are concerned to recover time they have lost, it would extend to the whole race of mankind.

Even good men have many failings and lapses to lament and recover. Rogers.

3. To regain, to get again.

Every of us, each for his self, labour'd how to recover him, while he rather daily sent us companions of our desert, than ever return'd in any found and fruitful manner. Dudley.

Stay a while, and we'll debate,

By what fate means the crown may be recover'd.

Shakspeare.

The spirit of the Lord is upon me, to preach the gospel to the poor, and recovering of sight to the blind. Luke, ix. 18.

Once in forty years cometh a pope, that calleth his eye upon the kingdom of Naples, to recover it to the church. Bacon.

These Italians, in despite of what could be done, recover'd Jerusalem. Knobbs.

I who e'er while the happy garden sung,

By one man's disobedience lost, now sing

Recover'd Paradise to all mankind,

By one man's firm obedience. Milton.

Any other person may join with him that is injured, and assist him in recovering from the offender so much as may make satisfaction. Litch.

4. To release.

That they may recover themselves out of the snare of the devil, who are taken captive by him.

2 Timothy, ii. 26.

5. To attain; to reach; to come up to.

The forest is not three leagues off;

If we recover that, we're sure enough. Shakspeare.

To RECOVER. v. n. To grow well from a disease, or any evil.

Adam, by this from the cold sudden damp

Recovering, his flutter'd spirits recu'd. Milton.

RECOVERABLE. adj. [recouvrable, Fr

from recover]

1. Possible to be restored from sickness.

2. Possible to be regained.

A prodigal's course

Is like the tun's, but not like his, recoverable, I fear. Shakspeare.

They promised the good people ease in the matter of protections, by which the debts from dishonest men and their followers were not recoverable.

Clarendon.

RECOVERY. n. s. [from recover.]

1. Restoration from sickness.

Our hopes are regular and reasonable, though in temporal affairs; such as are deliverance from enemies, and recovery from sickness. Taylor.

The sweat sometimes acid, is a sign of recovery

after acute distempers. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. Power or act of regaining.

What should move me to undertake the recovery of this, being not ignorant of the impossibility?

Shakspeare.

These counties were the keys of Normandy;

But wherewith weeps Warwick?

—For grief that they are past recovery. Shakspeare.

Mario Sanudo lived about the fourteenth age,

a man full of zeal for the recovery of the Holy Land. Arbutnot on Coins.

3. The act of cutting off an entail.

The spirit of wantonness is sure scared out of him; if the devil have him not in fee simple,

with fine and recovery. Shakspeare.

To RECOUNT. v. a. [recomter, French.]

Bid him recount the fore-rented practices. Shakspeare.

How I have thought of these times,

I shall recount hereafter. Shakspeare's Julius Caesar.

Plato in Timæus produces an Egyptian priest, who recounted to Solon out of the holy books of Egypt the story of the flood universal, which happened long before the Grecian inundation.

Raleigh.

The talk of worldly affairs hindereth much,

although recounted with a variety of notions; we speak with glibly, but seldom return to silence. Taylor.

Say, from these glaucous fields what harvest flows,

Recount our blessings, and conjure out woes. Dryden.

RECOUNTING. n. s. [from recount]

Relation; recital

When from the first to last, here, at us two,

Tell our recountings had most nicely bith'd;

As how I came into that d d art piece. Shakspeare.

RECOVERED, for recovered, or recu'd

Spenfer.

RECOVERSE. n. s. [recu-jus, Latin; re-

cours, French.]

Preventive physick, by purging noxious humours and the crises of sickness, prevents sickness in the healthy, or the recovery thereof in the val-utinary. 1 Swan's Vulgar Precious.

3. [Recounts, French.] Application as for help or protection. This is the common use.

Thus did this great peer, in a time of great recovery unto him and dependance upon him, the house and town full of servants and tutors. Warton.

The council of Trent commands the making recovery not only to the prayers of the faint, but to their aid and assistance. De la Place.

Can any man think, that this privilege was at first confer'd upon the church of Rome, and that christians in all ages had constant recovery to it for determining their differences; and yet that that very church should now be at a loss where to find it? Tillotson.

All other means have fail'd to wound her heart,

Our last recovery is therefore our art. Dryden.

4. Access.

The doors be lockt,

That no man ha' b' recovery to her by night. Shakspeare.

RECOVERFUL. adj. [from recovery.]

Moving alternately.

In this recoverful deep. Dryden.

RECREANT. adj. [recreant, French]

1. Cowardly; mean spirited; subdued; crying out for mercy; recanting out of fear.

Let be that lily debonaire,

Thou recreant knight, and soon thyself prepare

To battle. Spenfer.

Do't

Thou wear a lion's robe? do'st it for shame,

And hang a calf's skin on those recreant limbs? Shakspeare.

Here standeth Thomas Mowbray, duke of Norfolk,

On pain to be found false and recreant. Shakspeare.

The knight, whom fate and happy chance shall glue

From our the bark to force his opposite,

Or kill, or make him recreant on the plain,

The prize of valour and of love shall gain. Dryden.

2. Apostate; false.

Who for so many benefits receiv'd

Turn'd recreant to God, ingrate and false,

And so of all true good himself despoil'd. Milton.

To RECREATE. v. a. [recreo, Latin; recreer, French.]

1. To refresh after toil; to amuse or divert in weariness.

He has left you all his walks,
And to your heirs for ever, common pleasures,
To walk abroad and recreate yourselves. Shakspeare.
Necessity and the example of St. John, who increased himself with sporting with a tame partridge, teach us, that it is lawful to relax our bow,
but not suffer it to be unstrung. Taylor.

Painters, when they work on white grounds, place before them colours mixt with blue and green,
to cool their eyes, white wearying and paining
the sight more than any. Dryden.

2. To delight; to gratify.

These ripe fruits recreate the nostrils with their aromatick scent. Moré's Divine Dialogues.

He walked abroad, which he did not so much to recreate himself, as to obey the precepts of his physician. Pill.

3. To relieve; to revive.

Take a walk to refresh yourself with the open air, which inspired fresh doth exceedingly recreate the lungs, heart, and vital spirits. Harvey.

RECREATION. n. f. [from recreate.]

1. Relief after toil or pain; amusement in sorrow or distress.

The chief recreation she could find in her anguish, was sometime to visit that place, where first she was so happy as to see the cause of her unhappiness. Sidney.

I'll visit

The chapel where they lie, and tears, shed there, Shall be my recreation. Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.

The great men among the ancients, understood how to reconcile manual labour with affairs of state; and thought it no lessening to their dignity to make the one the recreation to the other. Locke.

2. Refreshment; amusement; diversion.

You may have the recreation of surprising those with admiration, who shall hear the deaf person pronounce whatsoever they shall desire, without your seeming to guide him. Holder's El. of Spec. b.

Nor is that man less deceived, that thinks to maintain a constant tenure of pleasure by a continual pursuit of sports and recreations. for all these things, as they refresh a man when weary, so they weary him when refreshed. South.

RECREATIVE. adj. [from recreate.] Refreshing; giving relief after labour or pain; amusing; diverting.

Let the music be recreative, and with some strange changes. Pagan.

Let not your recreations be lavish spenders of your time, but chuse such as are healthful, recrea-tive and apt to refresh you. but at a hand dwell upon them. Taylor.

The actors these trifles gain to the closets of ladies, seem to propose such easy and recreative experiments, which require but little time or charge. Boyle.

RECREATIVENESS. n. f. [from recrea-tive.] The quality of being recreative.

RECREMENT. n. f. [recrementum, Lat.] Drofs; spume; superfluous or useless parts.

The vital fire in the heart requires an ambient body of a yield & nature, to receive the superfluous scroities and other recrement of the blood.
Boyle.

RECREMENTAL. adj. [from recre-

RECRIMENTIOUS. ment] Drossy

To RECRIMINATE. v. n. [recriminer, Fr. re and crimino, Latin] To return one accusation with another.

It is not my business to recriminate, hoping sufficiently to clear myself in this matter. Stills g. f.

How shall such hypocrites reform the state,
On whom the brothels can recriminate? Dryden.

To RECRIMINATE. v. a. To accuse in return. Unusual.

Did not Joseph lie under black infamy? he scor'd so much as to clear himself, or to recriminate the strumpet. South.

RECRIMINATION. n. f. [recrimination, Fr. from recriminate.] Return of one accusation with another.

Publick defamation will seem disobliging enough to provoke a return, which again begets a rejoinder, and so the quarrel is carried on with mutual recriminations. Government of the Tongue.

RECRIMINATOR. n. f. [from recriminate.] He that returns one charge with another.

RECRUDESCENT. adj. [recrudescent, Lat.]
Growing painful or violent again.

To RECRUIT. v. a. [recruter, French.]

1. To repair any thing wasted by new supplies.

He was longer in recruiting his flesh than was usual; but by a milk diet he recovered it. Wjem.

Increase thy care to save the sinking kind;
With greens and flowers recruit their empty hives,
And seek fresh forage to sustain their lives. Dryden.
Her cheeks glow the brighter, recruiting their colour,

As flowers by sprinkling revive with fresh odour.

Granville.

This sun is set, but see in bright array

What hosts of heavenly lights recruit the day!

Love in a shining galaxy appears Triumphant still. Granville.

Seeing the variety of motion which we find in the world is always decreasing, there is a necessity of conserving and recruiting it by active principles; such as are the cause of gravity, by which planets and comets keep their motions in their orbs, and bodies acquire great motion in falling.

Newton.

2. To supply an army with new men.

He trusted the earl of Holland with the command of that army, with which he was to be recruited and assisted. Clarendon.

To RECRUIT. v. n. To raise new soldiers.

The French have only Switzerland besides their own country to recruit in; and we know the difficulties they meet with in getting thence a single regiment. Addison.

RECRUIT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Supply of any thing wasted: Pope has used it less properly for a substitute to something wanting.

Whatever nature has in worth deny'd,
She gives in large recruits of needful pride. Pope.

The endeavour to raise new men for the recruit of the army found opposition. Clarendon.

2. New soldiers.

The powers of Troy
With fresh recruits their youthful chief sustain:
Not theirs a raw and unexperient'd train,
But a firm body of embattled men. Dryden.

RECTANGLE. n. f. [rectangle, French;
rectangulus, Latin.] A figure which has one angle or more of ninety degrees.

If all Athens should decree, that in rectangle triangles the square, which is made of the side that subtendeth the right angle, is equal to the squares which are made of the sides containing the right angle, geometers would not receive satisfaction without demonstration. Boon's Vulgar Errors.

The mathematician considers the truth and properties belonging to a rectangle, only as it is in idea in his own mind. Locke.

RECTANGULAR. adj. [rectangulaire, Fr.
rectus and angulus, Lat.] Right angled;
having angles of ninety degrees.

Bricks moulded in their ordinary rectangular form, if they shall be laid one by another in a level row between any supporters sustaining the two ends, then all the pieces will necessarily sink. Wotton.

RECTANGULARLY. adv. [from rectangular.] With right angles.

At the equator, the needle will stand rectangularly, but approaching northward toward the tropic, it will regard the stone obliquely. Brown.

RECTIFIABLE. adj. [from rectify.] Capable to be set right.

The natural heat of the parts being insufficient for a perfect and thorough digestion, the errors of one concoction are not rectifiable by another.

Brown.

RECTIFICATION. n. f. [rectification, Fr.
from rectify.]

1. The act of setting right what is wrong.

It behoved the deity to renew that revelation from time to time, and to rectify abuses with such authority for the renewal and rectification, as was sufficient evidence of the truth of what was revealed. Forbes.

2. In chymistry, rectification is drawing any thing over again by distillation, to make it yet higher or finer. Quincy.

At the first rectification of some spirit of salt in a retort, a single pound afforded no less than six ounces of phlegm. Boyle.

To RECTIFY. v. a. [rectifier, French;
rectus and facio, Latin.]

1. To make right; to reform; to redress.

That wherein unfounder times have done amiss,
the better ages ensuing must rectify as they may.

Hobbs.

It shall be bootless

That longer you defer the court, as well

For your own quiet, as to rectify

What is unsettled in the king. Shakspeare.

Where a long court of pity has purged the heart, and rectified the will, knowledge will break in upon such a soul, like the sun shining in his full might. South.

The substance of this theory I mainly depend on,
being willing to suppose that many particularities may be rectified upon farther thought. Burnet.

If those men of parts, who have been employed in vitiating the age, had endeavoured to rectify and amend it, they need not have sacrificed their good sense to their fame. Addison.

The false judgment he made of things are owned, and the methods pointed out by which he rectified them. Atterbury.

2. To exalt and improve by repeated distillation.

The skin hath been kept white and smooth for above fifteen years, by being included with rectified spirit of wine in a cylindrical glass. Grew.

RECTILINEAR. adj. [rectus and linea, RECTILINEOUS. Latin.] Consisting of right lines.

There are only three rectilinear and ordinate figures, which can serve to this purpose; and inordinate or unlike ones must have been not only less elegant, but unequal. Ray.

This image was oblong and not oval, but terminated with two rectilinear and parallel sides and two semicircular ends. Newton.

The rays of light, whether they be very small bodies projected, or only motion and force propagated, are moved in right lines; and whenever a ray of light is by any obstacle turned out of its rectilinear way, it will never return into the same rectilinear way, unless perhaps by very great accident. Newton's Opticks.

RECTITUDE. n. f. [rectitude, French;
from rectus, Latin.]

1. Straightness; not curvity.

2. Rightness; uprightness; freedom from moral curvity or obliquity.

Faith and repentance, together with the rectitude

reds of their present engagement, would fully prepare them for a better life. King Charles.

Calm the disorders of thy mind, by reflecting on the wisdom, equity and absolute rectitude of all his proceedings. Atterbury.

RECTOR. n. f. [rector, Fr. rector, Lat.]

1. Ruler; lord; governor.

God is the supreme rector of the world, and of all those subordinate parts thereof. Hale.

When the rector of an university of scholars is chosen by the corporation or university, the election ought to be confirmed by the superior of such university. Ayliffe's Paragon.

2. Parson of an unimpropriated parish.

RECTORSHIP. n. f. [rectorat, French; from rector.] The rank or office of rector.

Had your bodies

No heart among you? or had you tongues to cry Against the rectorship of judgment? Shakespeare.

RECTORY. n. f. [rectorerie, French; from rector.]

A rectory or parsonage is a spiritual living, composed of land, tithe and other oblations of the people, separate or dedicate to God in any congregation for the service of his church there, and for the maintenance of the governor or minister thereof, to whose charge the same is committed. Spelman.

RECUBATION. n. f. [recubo, Lat.] The act of lying or leaning.

Whereas our translation renders it sitting, it cannot have that illation, for the French and Italian translations express neither position of session or recubation. Brown.

RECULE, for RECOIL. [reculer, French.] Spenser.

RECUMBENCY. n. f. [from recumbens.]

1. The posture of lying or leaning.

In that memorable show of Germanicus, twelve elephants danced unto the sound of musick, and after laid them down in trichinuma, or places of festival recumbency. Brown.

2. Rest; repose.

When the mind has been once habituated to this lazy recumbency and satisfaction on the obvious surface of things, it is in danger to rest satisfied there. Locke.

RECUMBENT. adj. [recumbens, Lat.] Lying; leaning.

The Roman recumbent, or more properly accumbent, posture in eating was introduced after the first Punick war. Arbutnot.

RECUPERATION. n. f. [recuperatio, Lat.] The recovery of a thing lost.

RECUPERATIVE, or RECUPERATORY. adj. [from recuperation.] Belonging to recovery.

TO RECURE. v. n. [recurro, Latin.]

1. To come back to the thought; to revive in the mind.

The idea, I have once had, will be unchangeably the same, as long as it recurs the same in my memory. Locke.

In this life the thoughts of God and a future state often offer themselves to us; they often spring up in our minds, and when expelled, recur again. Calamy.

A line of the golden verses of the Pythagoreans recurring on the memory, hath often guarded youth from a temptation to vice. Watts.

When any word has been used to signify an idea, that old idea will recur in the mind when the word is heard. Watts.

2. [Recurir, French.] To have recourse to; to take refuge in.

If to avoid succession in eternal existence; they recur to the punctum stans of the schools, they will thereby very little help us to a more positive idea of infinite duration. Locke.

Vol. II.

The second cause we know, but trouble not ourselves to recur to the first. Wake.

TO RECURE. v. a. [re and cure.] To recover from sickness or labour. Not in use.

Through wise handling and fair governance,

I him recured to a better will,

Purged from drugs of foul intemperance. Spenser.

Phabus pure

In western waves his weary wagon recured. Spens.

With one look the doth my life dismay,

And with another doth it straight recure. Spenser.

The wanton boy was shortly well recured

Of that his malady. Spenser.

Thy death's wound

Which he who comes thy Saviour shall recure,

Not by destroying Satan, but his works

In thee and in thy seed. Milton's Paradise Lost.

RECURE. n. f. Recovery; remedy.

Whatever fell into the enemies hands, was lost without recure: the old men were slain, the young men led away into captivity. Knolles.

RECURRENCE. } n. f. [from recurrent.]

RECURRENCEY. } Return.

Although the opinion at present be well suppressed, yet, from some strings of tradition and fruitful recurrence of error, it may revive in the next generation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

RECURRENT. adj. [recurrent, Fr. recurrent, Lat.] Returning from time to time.

Next to lingering durable pains, short intermittent or swift recurrent pains precipitate patients unto consumptions. Hursey.

One of the assistants told the recursions of the other pendulum hanging in the free air. Boyle.

RECURVATION. } n. f. [recurvus, Latin.]

RECURVITY. } Flexure backwards.

Ascending first into a capillary reception of the breast bone by a serpentine recurvation, it ascendeth again into the neck. Brown.

RECURVUS. adj. [recurvus, Lat.] Bent backward.

I have not observed tails in all; but in others I have observed long recurvus tails, longer than their bodies. Derham.

RECUSANT. n. f. [recusans, Lat.] One that refuses any terms of communion or society.

They demand of the lords, that no recusant lord might have a vote in passing that act. Clarend.

All that are recusants of holy rites. Holyday.

Were all corners ransacked, what a multitude of recusants should we find upon a far differing account from that of conscience! Deay of Party.

TO RECUSE. v. n. [recuso, Fr. recuso, Latin.] To refuse. A juridical word.

The humility, as well of understanding as manners of the fathers, will not let them be troubled, when they are recused as judges. Digby.

A judge may proceed notwithstanding my appeal, unless I recuse him as a suspected judge. Ayliffe.

RED. adj. [from the old Saxon, red; rbud, Welsh. As the town of Hertford, Mr. Camden, in his Britannia, noteth, first was called, by the Saxons, Herudford, the rud ford, or the red ford or water; high Dutch, roet; from the Greek, ῥοῦτος; French, rouge; Italian, rubro; from the Latin, ruber. Peacham.] Of the colour of blood, of one of the primitive colours, which is subdivided into many; as scarlet, vermilion, crimson.

Look I so pale?

—Ay, and no man in the presence, But his red colour hath look'd like cheeks. Shak.

Bring me the fairest creature northward born, To prove whose blood is reddest. Shak. Hamlet.

His eyes shall be red with wine, and his teeth white with milk. Genesis, xlix. 12.

His eyes dart forth red flames which scare the night,

And with worse fires the trembling ghosts affright. Cowley.

Th' angelick squadron turn'd fiery red. Milton.

If red lead and white paper be placed in the red light of the coloured spectrum, made in a dark chamber by the refraction of a prism, the paper will appear more lucid than the red lead, and therefore reflects the red making rays more copiously than red lead doth. Newton's Opticks.

The sixth red was at first of a very fair and lively scarlet, and soon after of a brighter colour, being very pure and brisk, and the best of all the reds. Newton's Opticks.

Why heavenly truth,

And moderation fair, were the red marks Of superstition's scourge. Thomson's Winter.

To seek reformation of evil laws is commendable, but for us the more necessary is a speedy redress of ourselves. Hooker

2. Relief; remedy.

No humble suitors press to speak for right;
No, not a man comes for redress to thee. Shakespeare
Such people as break the law of nations, all nations are interested to suppress, considering that the particular states, being the delinquents, can give no redress. Bacon.

Grief, finding no redress, ferment and rage,
Nor less than wounds immedicable,
Ranke, and fester, and gangrene
To black mortification. Milton.
A few may complain without reason; but there is occasion for redress when the cry is universal.
Davenant.

And equal to reduce me to my dust,
Desirous to resign and render back
All I receiv'd. Milton.

3. To reform from any disorder.

That temper in the archbishop, who licensed their most pernicious writings, left his successor a very difficult work to do, to reform and reduce a church into order, that had been so long neglected, and so ill filled. Clarendon.

4. To bring into any state of diminution.

A diaphanous body, reduced to very minute parts, thereby acquires many little surfaces in a narrow compass. Boyle.

His ire will quite consume us, and reduce
To nothing this essential. Milton.

The ordinary smallest measure is looked on as an unit in number, when the mind by division would reduce them into less fractions. Locke.

5. To degrade; to impair in dignity

There is nothing so bad, but a man may lay hold of something about it, that will afford matter of excuse; nor nothing to excellent, but a man may fasten upon something belonging to it, whereby to reduce it. Tillotson.

6. To bring into any state of misery or meannefs.

The most prudent part was his moderation and indulgence, not reducing them to desperation.
Arbutnot on Cains.

If they be our superiors, then 'tis modesty and reverence to all such in general, at least reductively.
Hammond.

Other niceties, though they are not matter of confidence, singly and apart, are yet so reductively; that is, though they are not so in the abstract, they become so by affinity and connection. L'Estrange.

REDUNDANCE. } n. s. [redundantia, Lat.]

REDUNDANCY. } from redundant.] Su- perfluity; superabundance; exuberance.

The cause of generation seemeth to be fulness;
for generation is from redundancy; this fulness aristeth from the nature of the creature, if it be hot, and moist and sanguine; or from plenty of food. Bacon.

It is a quality, that confines a man wholly within himself, leaving him void of that principle, which alone should dispose him to communicate and impart those redundancies of good, that he is possessed of. South.

I shall show our poet's redundancy of wit, justness of comparisons, and elegance of descriptions.
Garth.

Labour ferment the humours, casts them into their proper channels, and throws off redundancies. Addif.

REDUNDANT. adj. [redundans, Lat.]

Let a lord but own the happy lines;
How the wit brightens, how the sense refines! Pope.

2. To grow pure.

The pure limpid stream, when foul with stains,
Works itself clear, and as it runs refines. Addison.

3. To affect nicety.

He makes another paragraph about our refining in controversy, and coming nearer still to the church of Rome. Disbury.

REFINEDLY. adv. [from refine.] With affected elegance.

Will any dog
Refinedly leave his bitches and his bones
To turn a wheel? Dryden.

REFINEMENT. n. f. [from refine.]

1. The act of purifying, by clearing any thing from dross and recrementitious matter.

2. The state of being pure.

The more bodies are of kin to spirit in subtilty and refinement, the more diffusive are they. Norris.

3. Improvement in elegance or purity.

From the civil war to this time, I doubt whether the corruptions in our language have not equalled its refinements. Swift.

The religion of the gospel is only the refinement and exaltation of our best faculties. Lavo.

4. Artificial practice.

The rules religion prescribes are more successful in publick and private affairs, than the refinements of irregular cunning. Rogers.

5. Affectation of elegant improvement.

The flirts about town had a design to leave us in the lurch, by some of their late refinements. Add.

REFINER. n. f. [from refine.]

1. Purifier; one who clears from dross or recrement.

The refiners of iron observe, that that iron stone is hardest to melt, which is fullest of metal; and that easiest, which hath most dross. Bacon.

2. Improver in elegance.

As they have been the great refiners of our language, so it hath been my chief ambition to imitate them. Swift.

3. Inventor of superfluous subtilties.

No men see less of the truth of things; than these great refiners upon incidents, who are so wonderfully subtle, and over wise in their conceptions. Addison's Spectator.

Some refiners pretend to argue for the usefulness of parties in such a government as ours. Swift.

To REPAIR. v. a. [refair, French; re and fit.] To repair; to restore after damage.

He will not allow that ref is any such sign of art in the make of the present globe, or that there was so great care taken in the refining of it up again at the deluge. Whiston d.

Permit our ships a shelter on your shores,
Refitted from your woods with planks and oars. Dryden.

To REFLECT. v. a. [reflectir, French; refleto, Lat.] To throw back.

Was, his gather'd beams
Reflected, may with matter less foment. Milton.
Bodies close together reflect their own colour. Dryden.

To REFLECT. v. n.

1. To throw back light.

In dead men's skulls, and in those holes,
Where eyes did once inhabit, there were crept,
As 'twere in scorn of eyes, reflecting gems. Shak.

2. To bend back.

Inanimate matter moves always in a straight line, and never reflects in an angle, nor bends in a circle, which is a continual reflection, unless either by some external impulse, or by an intrinsic principle of gravity. Bentley's Sermons.

3. To throw back the thoughts upon the past or on themselves.

The imagination casts thoughts in our way, and forces the understanding to reflect upon them. Dappa.

In every action reflect upon the end; and in your undertaking it, consider why you do it. Taylor.

Who saith, who could such ill events expect?
With shame on his own counsels doth reflect. Dunk.

When men are grown up, and reflect on their own minds, they cannot find any thing more ancient there, than those opinions which were taught them before their memory began to keep a register of their actions. Locke.

It is hard, that any part of my land should be settled upon one who has used me so ill; and yet I could not see a sprig of any bough of this whole walk of trees, but I should reflect upon her and her levity. Addison's Spectator.

Let the king dismise his woes,
Reflecting on her fall redoubt;
And take the cypress from his brows,
To put his wonted laurels on. Prior.

4. To consider attentively.

Into myself my reason's eye I turn'd;
And as I much reflectid, much I mourn'd. Prior.

5. To throw reproach or censure.

Neither do I reflect in the least upon the memory of his late majesty, whom I entirely acquit of any imputation. Swift.

6. To bring reproach.

Errors of wives reflect on husbands still. Dryden.

REFLECTANT. adj. [reflectans, Latin.]

Bending back; flying back.

The ray descendent, and the ray reflectant, flying with to great a speed, that the air between them cannot take a formal ply any way, before the beams of the light be on both sides of it, it follows, that, according to the nature of humid things, it must first only swell. Digby on the Sul.

REFLECTION. n. f. [from reflect; thence I think reflexion less proper: reflexion, French; reflexus, Lat.]

1. The act of throwing back.

The eye sees not itself,
But by reflection from other things. Shakespeare.

If the sun's light consisted but of one sort of rays, there would be but one colour, and it would be impossible to produce any new by reflections or refractions. Cleyn.

2. The act of bending back.

Inanimate matter moves always in a straight line, nor ever reflects in an angle or circle, which is a continual reflection, unless by some external impulse. Bentley's Sermons.

3. That which is reflected.

She shines not upon fools, lest the reflection should hurt her. Shakespeare.

As the sun in water we can bear,
Yet not the sun, but his reflection there;
So let us view her here, in what she was,
And take her image in the watry glass. Dryden.

4. Thought

4. Thought thrown back upon the past, or the absent, on itself.

The three first parts I dedicate to my old friends, to take off those melancholy reflections, which the sense of age, infirmity, and death may give them.

Denham.

This dreadful image so possess'd her mind,
She ceas'd all farther hope, and now began
To make reflection on the unhappy man. Dryden.
Job's reflections on his once flourishing estate,
did at the same time afflict and encourage him.

Atterbury.

What wounding reproaches of soul must he feel,
from the reflections on his own ingratitude. Rogers.

5. The action of the mind upon itself.

Reflection is the perception of the operations of our own minds within us, as it is employed about the idea; it has got.

Locke.

6. Attentive consideration.

His delight grows and improves under thought and reflection; and while it exercises, does also endear itself to the mind; at the same time employing and inflaming the meditations. Shakspeare's Sonnet.

7. Censure.

He dy'd, and oh! may no reflection shed
Its poisonous venom on the royal dead. Prior.

REFLECTIVE. adj. [from reflect.]

1. Throwing back images.

When the weary king gave place to night,
His beams he to his royal brother lent,
And so thine still in his reflective light. Dryden.
In the reflective stream the sighing bride,
Viewing her charms impair'd, abash'd shall hide
Her pensive head. Prior.

2. Considering things past; considering the operations of the mind.

Forc'd by reflective reason I confess,
That human science is uncertain guess. Prior.

REFLECTOR. n. s. [from reflect.] Con- siderer.

There is scarce any thing that nature has made,
or that men do suffer, whence the devout reflector cannot take an occasion of an aspiring meditation.

Boyle on Clours.

REFLEX. adj. [reflexus, Lat.] Directed backward.

The motions of my mind are as obvious to the reflex act of the soul, or the turning of the intellectual eye inward upon its own actions, as the pulsions of my sense are obvious to my sense, I see the object, and I perceive that I see it. Hale.

The order and beauty of the inanimate parts of the world, the discernible ends of them do evince by a reflex argument, that it is the workmanship, not of blind mechanism or blunder chance, but of an intelligent and benign agent. Fenby.

REFLEX. n. s. [reflexus, Latin.] Reflexion.

There was no other way for angels to sin, but by reflex of their understandings upon themselves.

Hale.

I'll say you grey is not the morning's eye,
'Tis but the pale reflex of Cynthia's brow. Shakspeare.

REFLEXIBILITY. n. s. [from reflexible.]

The quality of being reflexible.

Reflexibility of rays is their disposition to be reflected or turned back into the same medium from any other medium, upon whose surface they fall, and rays are more or less reflexible, which are turned back more or less easily. Newt.

REFLEXIBLE. adj. [from reflexus, Lat.] Capable to be thrown back.

Sir Isaac Newton has demonstrated, by convincing experiments, that the light of the sun consists of rays differently refrangible and reflexible; and that these rays are differently reflexible, that are differently refrangible. Cuvier.

REFLEXIVE. adj. [reflexus, Lat.] Having respect to something past.

That assurance reflexive cannot be a divine faith.

but at the most an human, yet such as perhaps I may have no doubting mixed with. Hammond.

REFLEXIVELY. adv. [from reflexive.] In a backward direction.

Solomon tells us life and death are in the power of the tongue, and that not only directly in regard of the good or ill we may do to others, but reflexively also in respect of what may rebound to ourselves. Government of the Tongue.

REFLOAT. n. s. [re and float.] Ebb; reflux.

The main float and refloat of the sea, is by consent of the universe, as part of the diurnal motion.

Bacon.

TO REFLOURISH. v. a. [re and flourish.] To flourish anew.

Virtue given for lost
Revives, reflourishes, then vigorous moft,
When most unactive deem'd. Milton's Agonistes.

REFLUENT. adj. [refluens, Latin.] Run- ning back; flowing back.

The liver receives the refluent blood almost from all the parts of the abdomen. Arbutnot.

Tell, by what paths,
Back to the fountain's head the sea conveys
The refluent rivers, and the land repays. Blackmore.

REFLUA. n. s. [reflux, French; refluxus, Lat.] Backward course of water.

Besides
Mine own that 'bide upon me, all from me Shall with a fierce reflux on me rebound. Milton.
'The variety of the flux and reflux of Euripus, or whether the same do ebb and flow seven times a day, is incontrovertible. Brown.

RECILLATION. n. s. [recicillo, Lat.] Restoration of strength by refreshment.

TO REFORM. v. a. [reformo, Latin; reformer, Fr.] To change from worse to better.

A sect in England, following the very same rule of policy, seeketh to reform even the French reformation, and purge out from thence all dregs of popery. Haller.

So worthier of Gods, was built
With sacred thoughts, reforming what was old.

Milton.

More than storm
Fall on our times, where ruin must reform. Deh.

Now low'ning looks preface approaching storms,
And now prevailing love her face reform. Dryden.
One cannot attempt the perfect reforming the languages of the world, without renouncing himself ridiculous. Locke.

The example alone of a vicious prince will corrupt an age; but that of a good one will not reform
it. Dewitt.

TO REFORM. v. n. To pass by change from worse to better.

Was his doctrine of the mass struck out in this conflict? or did it give him occasion of reforming in this point? Atterbury.

REFORM. n. s. [French.] Reformation.

REFORMATION. n. s. [reformation, Fr. from reform.]

1. Change from worse to better; commonly used of human manners.

Never came reformation in a flood
With such a heady current, scow'ring faults;
Not every Hydra-headed wilfulness
So soon did lose his seat, as in this king. Shakspeare.
Satire lashes vice into reformation. Dryden.

The pagan converts mention this great reformation of those who had been the greatest sinners, with that sudden and surprising change, which the christian religion made in the lives of the most profligate. Addison.

2. [By way of eminence.] The change of religion from the corruptions of popery to its primitive state.

The burden of the reformation lay on Luther's shoulders. Atterbury.

REFORMER. n. s. [from reform.]

1. One who makes a change for the better; an amender.

Publick reformers had need first practise that on their own hearts, which they propose to try on others. King Charles.

The complaint is more general, than the endeavours to redress it: abroad every man would be a reformer, how very few at home! Spratt.

It was honour enough, to behold the English churches reformed; that is, delivered from the reformers. South.

2. Those who changed religion from po- pish corruptions and innovations.

Our first reformers were famous confessors and martyrs all over the world. Bacon.

TO REFRACT. v. a. [refractus, Lat.] To break the natural course of rays.

If its angle of incidence be large, and the refractive power of the medium not very strong, to throw it far from the perpendicular, it will be re-fracted. Cuvier's Philosophical Principles.

Rays of light are urged by the refracting media.

Cuvier.

Refracted from yon eastern cloud,
The grand ethereal bow shoots up. Timothy.

REFRACTION. n. s. [refraction, French]

Refraction, in general, is the incurvation or change of determination in the body moved, which happens to it whilst it enters or penetrates any medium: in dioptricks, it is the variation of a ray of light from that right line, which it would have pursued on, had not the density of the medium turned it aside. Harris.

Refraction, out of the rarer medium into the denser, is made towards the perpendicular. Newton.

REFRACTIVE. adj. [from refract.] Hav- ing the power of refraction.

Those superficies of transparent bodies reflect the greatest quantity of light, which have the greatest refracting power; that is, which intercede mediums that differ most in their refractive densities.

Newton's Optics.

REFRACTORINESS. n. s. [from refrac- tory.] Sullen obstinacy.

I did never allow any man's refractoriness against the privileges and orders of the houses. King Charles.

Great complaint was made by the presbyterian gangs, of my refractoriness to obey the parliament's order. Saunders.

REFRACTORY. adj. [refractorius, Fr. refractorius, Latin; and so should be written refractory. It is now accented on the first syllable, but by Shakspeare on the second.] Obstinate; perverse; contumacious.

There is a law in each well-ordered nation,
To curb those raging appetites that are Most disobedient and refractory. Shakspeare.

A rough hewn seaman, being brought before a wife justice for some misdemeanor, was by him ordered to be sent away to prison, and was refractory after he heard his doom, inasmuch as he would not stir a foot from the place where he stood, saying, it was better to stand where he was, than go to a worse place. Mason's Apophthegms.

Vulgar compliance with any illegal and extravagant ways, like violent motions in nature, soon grows weary of itself, and ends in a refractory sul-

Refractory mortal! if thou wilt not trust thy friends, take what follows; know assuredly, before next full moon, that thou wilt be hung up in chains. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

These atoms of theirs may have it in them, but they are refractory and sullen; and therefore, like men of the same tempers, must be banged and buffeted into reason. Bentley.

Refractory.

REFRAGABLE. adj. [refragabilis, Lat.] Capable of confutation and conviction.
To REFRAIN. v. a. [refrenar, French; re and frangere, Latin.] To hold back; to keep from action.

Hold not thy tongue, O God, keep not still silence; refrain not thyself. Psalm lxxxiii. 1.
My son, walk not thou in the way with them, refrain thy foot from their path. Proverbs, i. 15.

Nor from the holy one of heav'n Refrain d his tongue. Milton.

Neptune aton'd, his wrath shall now refrain,
Or thwart the synod of the gods in vain. Pop.

To REFRAIN. v. n. To forbear; to abstain; to spare.

In what place, or upon what consideration sever it be, they do it, were it in their own opinion of no force being done, they would undoubtedly refrain to do it. Hobbes.

For my name's sake will I defer mine anger, and refrain for thee, that I cut thee not off. Psalm.

That thou did not on flesh, at I all the faithful party before the flood, may become more probable, because they refrain'd themselves some time after.

Brown's Vulgar Etym.

REFRANGIBILITY. n. s. [from refrangibile.]

Refrangibility of the rays of light, is their disposition to be refracted or turned out of their way, in passing out of one transparent body or medium into another. Newton.

REFRANGIBLE. adj. [re and frango, Latin.]

As some rays are more refrangible than others; that is, are more turned out of their course, in passing from one medium to another, it follows, that after such refraction, they will be separated, and their distinct colour observed. Locke.

REFRACTION. n. s. [re and frango, Lat.] The act of restraining.

To REFRESH. v. a. [refraischer, French; refrigero, Latin.]

1. To recreate, to relieve after pain, fatigue, or want.

Service shall with steeld sinew toil;
And labour shall refresh itself with hope. Shakespeare.

Mulick was ordain'd to refresh the mind of man,
After his studies or his usual pain. Shakespeare.

He was in no danger to be overtaken, so that he was content to refresh his men. Clarendon.

His meals are coarse and short, his employment warrantable, his sleep certain and refreshing, neither interrupted with the labours of a guilty mind, nor the actions of a crazy body. South.

If you would have trees to thrive, take care that no plants be near them, which may deprive them of nourishment, or hinder refreshings and helps that they might receive. Merrimer.

2. To improve by new touches any thing impaired.

The rest refresh the scaly snakes that fold
The shield of Pallas, and renew their gold. Dryden.

3. To refrigerate; to cool.

A dew coming after heat refresheth. Ecclesi. xliii. 22.

REFRESH. n. s. [from refresch.] That which refreshes.

The kind refresher of the summer heats. Thomson.

REFRESHMENT. n. s. [from refresch.]

1. Relief after pain, want, or fatigue.

2. That which gives relief, as food, rest.

He was full of agony and horror upon the approach of a dismal death, and so had most need of the refreshments of society, and the friendly assistances of his disciples. South.

Such honest refreshments and comforts of life, our christian liberty has made it lawful for us to use. Spinn.

REFRECTOR. n. s. The burden of a song. Dick.

REFRIGERANT. adj. [refrigerant, Fr. from refrigerate.] Cooling, mitigating heat.

In the cure of gangrenes, you must beware of dry heat, and resort to things that are refrigerant, with an inward warmth and virtue of cherishing. Bacon.
If it arise from an external cause, apply refrigerants, without any preceding evacuation. Boiss.

To REFRIGERATE. v. a. [refrigero, re and frigus, Latin.] To cool.

The great breezes, which the motion of the air in great circles, such as the girdle of the world, produce, do refrigerate; and therefore in those parts noon is nothing so hot, when the liquors are great, as about ten of the clock in the forenoon. Bacon.

Whether they be refrigerant in limitation or some what equanimity, though in a lesser degree, they discover some verities. Bacon.

REFRIGERATION. n. s. [refrigeratio, Latin; refrigeration, French.] The act of cooling; the state of being cooled.

Divers do that; the cause may be the refrigeration of the tongue, when by it is left apt to move. Bacon.

If the more refrigeration of the air would fit it for breathing, this might be somewhat helped with bellows. Wilkins.

REFRIGERATIVE. adj. [refrigerativus, French; refrigeratorius, Latin.] Cooling; having the power to cool.

REFRIGERATORY. n. s.

1. That part of a distilling vessel that is placed about the head of a still, and filled with water to cool the condensing vapours; but this is now generally done by a worm or spiral pipe, turning through a tub of cold water. Quincy.

2. Any thing internally cooling.

A delicate wine, and a durable refrigeratory. Mort.

REFRIGERIUM. n. s. [Latin.] Cool refreshment; refrigeration.

It must be acknowledged, the ancients have talked much of annual refrigeria, respites or intervals of punishment to the damned; as particularly on the festivals. South.

REST. part. pret. of reave.

1. Deprived; taken away. Obsolete.

Thus we well left, he better rest,
In heaven to take his place,
That like by life and death, at last,
We may obtain like grace. Alham's S. boalmaster.

I, in a desperate bay of death,
Like a poor bark, of sails and tackling rest,
Ruth all to pieces on thy rocky bosome. Shakespeare.

Another ship had seiz'd on us,
And would have rest the fishers of their prey. Shak.

Our dying hero, from the continent
Ravish'd whole towns, and forts from Spaniards rest,
As his last legacy to Britain left. Wallis.

2. Preterite of reave. Took away. Obsolete.

So 'twixt them both, they not a lamkin left,
And when lambs fail'd, the old sheeps lives they rest. Spenser.

About his shoulders broad he threw An airy hide of some wild beast, whom he
In savage forest by adventure slew,
And rest the spoil his ornament to be. Spenser.

REFUGE. n. s. [refuge, French; refugium, Latin.]

1. Shelter from any danger or distress; protection.

Rocks, dens, and caves! but I in none of these find place or refuge. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The young vipers supposed to break through the belly of the dam, will, upon any fright, for protection run into it; for then the old one receives them in at her mouth, which way, the fright being past, they will return again; which is a peculiar way of refuge. Brown.

Those, who take refuge in a multitude, have an Arian counsel to answer for. Atterbury.

2. That which gives shelter or protection.

The Lord will be a refuge for the oppressed; a refuge in times of trouble. Psalm ix. 9.

They shall be your refuge from the avenger of blood. Job.

I air majesty, the refuge and relief
Of those whom fate pursues. Dryden.

3. Expedient in distress.

This last old man,
Whom with a crack'd heart I have sent to Rome, Lay d me above the measure of a father:
Their latest refuge was to send him. Shakespeare.

Light must be supplied, among graceful refuge, by terracing any thing in danger of darkness. Watts.

To REFUGE. v. a. [refugere, French; from the noun.] To shelter; to protect.

Silly beggars,
Who sitting in the stocks, refuge their shame,
That in my have, and others must, sit there. Shak.

Dreads the vengeance of her injur'd lord;
Even by those gods, who refuge d her, abhor'd. Dryden.

REFUGEE. n. s. [refugie, French.] One who flies to shelter or protection.

Poor refugees, at first they purchase here;
And soon a denizen'd, they dominate. Dryden.

This is become more necessary in some of their governments, since so many refugees settled among them. Addison.

REFULGENCE. n. s. [from refulgent.] Splendour; brightness.

REFULGENT. adj. [refulgens, Lat.] Bright; shining; glittering; splendid.

He neither might, nor wish'd to know
A more refulgent light. Wallis.

So conspicuous and refulgent a truth is that of God's being the author of man's felicity, that the dispute is not so much concerning the thing, as concerning the manner of it. Boyle.

Agamemnon a train,
When his refulgent arms flash'd through the shady plain.

Fled from his well known face. Dryden's A. cis.

REFUGENTLY. adv. [from refulgent.] In a shining manner.

To REFUND. v. n. [refundo, Latin.]

1. To pour back.

Were the humours of the eye tinged with any colour, they would refund that colour upon the object, and so it would not be represented as in itself it is. Ray.

2. To repay what is received; to restore.

A governor, that had pill'd the people, was, for receiving of bribes, sentenced to refund what he had wrongfully taken. L'Estrange.

How to Icarus, in the bridal hour,
Shall I, by waste undone, refund the dowry? Pope.

3. Swift has somewhere the absurd phrase, to refund himself, for to reimburse.

REFUSAL. n. s. [from refuse.]

1. The act of refusing, denial of any thing demanded or solicited.

God has born with all his weak and obstinate refusals of grace, and has given him time day after day. Rogers.

2. The preemption; the right of having any thing before another; option.

When employments go a begging for want of hands, they shall be sure to have the refusal. Newsp.

To REFUSE. v. a. [refuser, French.]

1. To

1. To deny what is solicited or required; not to comply with.

If he should chuse the right casket, you shall refuse to perform your father's will, if you should refuse to accept him. Shakespeare.

Having most affectionately set life and death before them, and conjured them to chuse one, and avoid the other, he still leaves unto them, as to free and rational agents, a liberty to refuse all his calls, to let his talents lye by them unprofitable.

Hammond.

Wonder not then what God for you saw good

If I refuse not, but convert, as you,

To proper substance.

Milton.

Common experience has justly a mighty influence on the minds of men, to make them give or refuse credit to any thing proposed.

Locke.

2. To reject; to dismiss without a grant.

I may neither chuse whom I would, nor refuse whom I dislike. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

To REFUSE. v. n. Not to accept; not to comply.

Women are made as they themselves would choose;

Too proud to ask, too humble to refuse. Garth.

REFUSE. adj. [from the verb. The noun has its accent on the first syllable, the verb on the second.] Unworthy of reception; left when the rest is taken.

Every thing vile and refuse they destroyed. Samuel.

He never had vexatious law-disputes about his dues, but had his tithes fully paid, and not of the most refuse parts, but generally the very best. Fell.

Please to bestow on him the refuse letters; he hopes by printing them to get a plentiful provision.

Spektor.

REFUSE. n. s. That which remains disregarded when the rest is taken.

We dare not disgrace our worldly superiours with offering unto them such refuse as we bring unto God himself.

Hooker.

Many kinds have much refuse, which counterwails that which they have excellent.

Bacon.

I know not whether it be more shame or wonder, to see that men can so put off ingenuity, as to descend to so base a vice; yet we daily see it done, and that not only by the scum and refuse of the people.

Government of the Tongue.

Down with the falling stream the refuse run, To raise with joyful news his drooping son. Dryd.

This humourist keeps more than he wants, and gives a vast refuse of his superfluities to purchase heaven.

Edward, duke of York,

Usurps the regal title, and the seat

Of England's true anointed lawful heir. Shakespeare.

Why am I sent for to a king,

Before I have shook off the regal thoughts

Wherewith I reign'd? Shakespeare's Richard II.

With them comes a third of regal port,

With faded splendour wan, who by his gait

And fierce demeanour seems the prince of hell. Mil.

When was there ever a better prince on the throne than the present queen? I do not talk of her government, her love of the people, or qualities that are purely regal; but her piety, charity, temperance, and conjugal love.

Swift.

REGAL. n. s. [regale, Fr.] A musical instrument.

The sounds, that produce tones, are ever from such bodies as are in their parts and parts equal; and such are in the nightingale pipes of regals or organs.

1. That which remains; that which is left after the loss or decay of the rest. It is generally used in the plural.

Up dreary dale of darkness queen,

Go gather up the reliques of thy race,

Or else go them avenge.

Spenser.

Shall we go for the reliques of this town?

Shakspeare.

The fragments, scraps, the bits, and greasy remains

Of her o'createn faith are bound to Diomedes.

Shakspeare.

Nor death itself can wholly wash their stains;

But long contracted filth ev'n in the soul remains;

The reliques of inveterate vice they wear

And spots of sin.

Dryden's Antioch.

2. It is often taken for the body deserted by the soul.

Whit.

3. To forbear; to depart from.

In case it may be proved, that amongst the number of rites and orders common unto both, there are particulars, the use whereof is utterly unlawful, in regard to some special bad and noisome quality; there is no doubt but we ought to relinquish such rites and orders, what freedom soever we have to retain the other still. Hooker.

RELINQUISHMENT. n. s. [from relinquish.] The act of forsaking.

Government or ceremonies, or whatsoever it be, which is popish, away with it: this is the thing they require in us, the utter relinquishment of all things popish. Hooker.

The natural tenderness of conscience which must first create in the soul a sense of sin, and from thence produce a sorrow for it, and at length cause a relinquishment of it, is took away by a customary repeated course of sinning. South.

RELISH. n. s. [from relecher, French, to lick again. Minshew, Skinner.]

These were the renowned of the congregation,
Princes of the tribes, heads of thousands. Numbers
That thrice renowned and learned French king,
Finding Patarch's tomb without any inscription, Wrote one himself; saying, shame it was, that he Who sung his mistress's praise seven years before her death, should twelve years want an epitaph. Peacham
The rest were long to tell, though far renown'd. Milton

Of all the cities in Roman lands,
The chief and most renown'd Ravenna stands,
Adorn'd in ancient times with arms and arts. Dryden

How the renown'd for steel and unexhausted mines. Dryden

RENT, n. s. [from rend.] A break; a laceration.

This council made a schism and rent from the most ancient and pure churches which lived before them. White

Thou viper
Hast cancell'd kindred, made a rent in nature,
And through her holy bowels gnaw'd thy way,
Through thy own blood to empire. Dryden

He who lies thus vast rent in so high a rock,
How the convex parts of one side exactly tally with the concave of the other, must be satisfied, that it was the effect of an earthquake. Addison

To RENT, v. z. [rather to rend.] To tear; to lacerate.

A time to rent, and a time to sew. Eccles. iii. 7.

To RENT, v. n. [now written rant.]
To roar; to bluster: we still say, a tearing fellow, for a noisy bally.

He ventur'd to dismiss his fear,
That partings won't rent and tear,
And give the desperate attack
To danger still behind its back. Hudibras

RENT, n. s. [rente, French.]

1. Revenue; annual payment.

Idol ceremony,
What are thy rents? what are thy comings in?
O ceremony show me but thy worth! Shakespeare
I bought an annual rent on two,
And live just as you see I do. Pope

2. Money paid for any thing held of another.

Such is the mould, that the blest tenant seeds
On precious fruits, and pays his rent in weeds. Wallace

Folks in mudwall tenement, Present a peppercorn for rent. Prior

To RENT, v. a. [renter, French.]

1. To hold by paying rent.

When a servant is called before his master, it is

Let the priests repair the breaches of the hoof. 2 Kings

The fines imposed were the more repined against, because they were assigned to the rebuilding and repairing of St. Paul's church. Clarendon Heav'n from repair'd her mural breach. Milton

To amend any injury by an equivalent,
He justly hath driv'n out his rebel toes
To keep't hall; and, to repair their loss, Created this new happy race of men. Milton

To fill up anew, by something put in the place of what is lost.
To be reveng'd,
And to repair his numbers thus impair'd. Milton

REPA'IR, n. s. [from the verb.] Reparation; supply of loss; restoration after dilapidation.

Before the curing of a strong disease,
Ev'n in the instant of repair and health,
The fit is strongest. Shakespeare's King Lear
He cast in his mind for the repair of the cathedral church. Field

Temperance, in all methods of curing the gout, is a regular and simple diet, proportioning the daily
repairs to the daily decay of our wasting bodies. Temple's Miscellanies

All automata need a frequent repair of new strength, the causes whence their motion does proceed being subject to fail. Wilkins

To REPA'IR, v. n. [repairer, Fr.] To go to; to betake himself.

May all to Athens back again repair. Shakspeare
Depart from hence in peace,
Search the wide world, and where you please repair. Dryden

'Tis fix'd; the irrevocable doom of Jove:
Haste then, Cyllenius, through the liquid air,
Go mount the winds, and to the shades. Prior

REPA'IR, n. s. [repare, Fr. from the verb.]
1. Return; abode.

He saw Ulysses; at his ships repair,
That had been bruist with the enraged sea. Chap.
So 'scapes th' inflicting fire his narrow jail,
And makes small outlets into open air;
There the fierce winds his tender force assail,
And beat him down, and to his ship repair. Dryden

REP

The king sent a proclamation for their repair to their houses, and for a preservation of the peace. Clarendon

REPA'IRER, n. s. [from repair.] Amend-er; restorer.

He that governs well, leads the blind, but he that teaches, gives him eyes; and it is a glorious thing to have been the repairer of a decayed intellect. South's Sermons

O sacred rasky

O peace of mind repairs of decay,
Whole balm renow the limbs to labours of the day. Dryden

REPA'NDOUS, adj. [repandus, Latin.]
Bent upwards.

Though they be drawn repandus or convexly
crook'd in one piece, yet the dolphin that carlieth Arion is convexly inverted, and hath its spine depressed in another. Brown

REPARABLE, adj. [reparable, French;
reparabilis, Latin.] Capable of being amended, retrieved, or supplied by something equivalent.

The parts in man's body easily reparable, as spirit, blood, and flesh, die in the embracement of the parts hardly reparable, as bones, nerves, and membranes. Bacon

When its spirit is drawn from wine, it will not by the reunion of its constituent liquors, be reduced to its pristine nature; because the workmanship of nature, in the disposition of the parts, was too elaborate to be imitable, or reparable by the bare opposition of those divided parts to each other. Boyle

An adulterous person is tied to restitution of the injury, so far as is reparable, and can be made to the wronged person, to make provision for the children he governs in unlawful embraces. Taylor

REPARABLY, adv. [from reparable.] In a manner capable of remedy, by restoration, amendment, or supply.

REPARATION, n. s. [reparation, French;

dictive, not reparative; and begun only for revenge, not for reparation of damages. Kathwell

REPARTEE, n. s. [repattie, French.]
Smart reply.

The fools overflowed with smart repartees, and were only distinguished from the intended wits, by being called conceits. Dryden
'Tis said as bad as he;
May but the youngster's repartee. Prior

To REPARTEL, v. n. To make smart replies.

High flight she had, and wit at will,
And to her tongue lay tedious still;
For in all visits, who but she,
To argue, or to repartee? Prior

To

To REPA'SS. v. a. [repasser, Fr.] To pass again; to pass or travel back.

Well we have pass'd, and now repas'd the seas,
And brook no doubt help. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
We shall find small reason to think, that Abraham pass'd and repas'd those ways more often than he was enforced to do, if we consider that he had no other comfort in this wearisome journey, than the strength of his faith in God. Raleigh.
If his soul hath wing'd the destin'd flight,
Homeward with plous speed repas's the main,
To the pale shade funeral rites ordain. Pope.

To REPA'SS. v. n. To go back in a road.
Five gidds bind the knee, the torrid zone
Glow with the passing and repas'sing fun. Dryden.

REPA'ST. n. s. [repas, French; re and pastus, Latin.]

1. A meal; act of taking food.
From dance to sweet repast thy turn

The benefit of birth with banish service. Racine.

5. To reimburse with what is owed.

If you repay me not on such a day,
Such sums as are express'd in the condition,
Let the forfeit be an equal pound of your fair flesh. Shakespeare.

REPA'YMENT. n. s. [from repay.]

1. The act of repaying.

2. The thing repaid.

The centesima which it was not lawful to exceed; and what was said over it, was reckoned as a repayment of part of the principal. Abulnot.

To REPA'LL. v. a. [rappeller, French.]

1. To recall. Out of use.

I will repall thee, or be well assur'd,
Adversaries to be banished myself. Shakespeare.
Where forget all former griefs;
Let all grudge, repall thee home again. Shakespeare.

Laws, that have been approved, may be again repall'd, and disputed against by the authors themselves. Hooker's Preface.

Adam soon repall'd
The doubts that in his heart arose. Milton.

Statutes are gently repall'd, when the reason ceases for which they were enacted. Dryden.

REPA'LL. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Recall from exile. Not in use.

If the time thrust forth
A cause for thy repall, we shall not send O'er the vast world to seek a single man. Shakespeare.

2. Revocation; abrogation.

The king being advertised, that the over-large grants of lands and liberties made the lords so insolent, did absolutely revoke all such grants; but the earl of Desmond above all found himself griev'd with this revocation or repall of liberties, and declared his dislike. Davies on Ireland.

If the pietisticians should obtain their ends, I could not be sorry to find them mistaken in the point which they have most at heart, by the repall of the test, I mean the benefit of employment. Swift.

To REPEAT. v. a. [repeto, Latin; re- and prius, French.]

1. To iterate; to use again; to do again.

He, though his power
Creation could repeat, yet would be loth
Us to abolish. Milton.

Where sudden alterations are not necessary, the same effect may be obtained by the repeated force of diet with more safety to the body. Abulnot.

2. To speak again.

The poems, for the excellency of their use, deserve to be often repeated; but that their multitude permiteth not any other repetition. Hooker.

3. To try again.

Neglecting Creusa's life for his own,
Repeats the danger of the burning town. Waller.
Beyond this place you can have no retreat,
Stay here, and I the danger will repeat. Dryden.

4. To recite; to rehearse.

These evils thou repeat'st upon thyself,
Have banish'd me from Scotland. Shakespeare.
Thou their natures know'st, and gav'st them names,
Needless to thee repeated. Milton.

He repeated some lines of Virgil, suitable to the occasion. Waller's Life.

REPA'TORY. adv. [from repeated.]

The first step towards a woman's humility, seems to require a repentance of her education. Lane.

2. Sorrow for sin, such as produces newness of life; penitence.

Repentance to altereth a man through the mercy of God, he never to defiled, that it maketh him pure. Wijempe.

Who by repentance is not satisfied,
Is nor of heav'n nor earth; for these are pleas'd;
By penitence th' Eternal's wrath's appeas'd. Shakespeare.

Repentance is a change of mind, or a conversion from a sin to God; not some one bare act of change, but a lasting durable state of new life, which is called regeneration. Hammond.

In regard of secret and hidden faults, unless God should accept of a general repentance for unknown sins, few or none at all could be saved. Perkins.

This is a confidence, of all the most irrational; for upon what ground can a man promise himself a future repentance, who cannot promise himself a futurity? South.

REPENTANT. adj. [repentant, French; from repent.]

1. Sorrowful for the past.

2. Sorrowful for sin.

Thus they, in lowliest plight, repentant stood. Milton.

3. Expressing sorrow for sin.

After I have interr'd this noble-king,
And wet his grave with my repentant tears,
I will with all expedient duty see you. Shakespeare
There is no malice in this burning coal;
The breath of heav'n hath blown its spirit out,
And strew'd repentant ashes on its head. Shakespeare Relentless walls! whose darksome round contains Repentant sighs and voluntary pains. Pope.

TO REPEOPLE. v. a. [re and people; re-peupler, French.] To stock with people anew.

An occurrence of such remark, as the universal flood and the re-peopling of the world, must be fresh in memory for about eight hundred years; especially considering, that the peopling of the world was gradual. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

TO REPERCUSS. v. a. [repercutio, repercusso, Latin.] To beat back; to drive back; to rebound. Not in use.

All in ovens, though it doth boil and dilate itself, and is re-percussed, yet it is without noise. Bacon.

REPERCUSSION. n. f. [from repercusso; repercusso, Latin; repercussion, French.] The act of driving back; rebound.

In echoes, there is no new elision, but a re-percussion. Bacon.

By re-percussion beams engender fire,
Shaves by reflection shapes beget,
The voice itself when stopp'd does back retire,
And a new voice is made by it. Cowley.

The various ways recoil, and swiftly flow
By mutual re-percussions to and fro. Blackmore.

REPERCUSSIVE. adj. [repercusso, Fr.]

1. Having the power of driving back or causing a rebound.

And re-percussive rocks renew'd the sound. Pattis.

2. Repellent.

Blood is stanch'd by astringent and re-percussive medicines. Bacon.

Defluxions, if you apply a strong re-percussive to the place affected, and do not take away the cause, will shift to another place. Bacon.

3. Driven back; rebounding. Not proper.

Amid Carnaxion's mountains rages loud
The re-percussive roar, with mighty crash Tumble the smitten cliffs. Thomson.

REPERTITIOUS. adj. [repertus, Latin.]

Found; gained by finding. Dict.

REPERTORY. n. f. [repertoire, Fr. repertorium, Lat.] A treasury; a magazine; a book in which any thing is to be found.

1. Iteration of the same thing.

The frequent repetition of aliment is necessary for repairing the fluids and solids. Arbutnot.

2. Recital of the same words over again.

The psalms, for the excellency of their use, deserve to be often repeated; but that the multitude of them permitteth not any other repetition. Hooker.

3. The act of reciting or rehearsing.

If you conquer Rome, the benefit
Which you shall thereby reap, is such a name,
Whole repetition will be dogg'd with curses. Shakespeare.

4. Recital.

I love such tears,
As fall from fit notes, beaten through mine ears,
With repetitions of what heaven hath done. Chapm.
5. Recital from memory, as distinct from reading.

TO REPIÑE. v. n. [re and pine.]

1. To fret; to vex himself; to be discontented: with at or against.

Of late,

When corn was given them gratis, you repin'd. Shakespeare

The fines imposed were the more repined against, because they were assigned to the rebuilding of St. Paul's church. Clarendon.

If you think how many diseases, and how much poverty there is in the world, you will fall down upon your knees, and, instead of repining at one affliction, will admire so many blessings received at the hand of God. Temple.

2. To envy.

The ghosts repine at violated night;
And curse th' invading sun, and sicken at the sight. Dryden.

Just in the gate

Dwell pale diseases and repining age. Dryden.

REPIÑER. n. f. [from repine.] One that frets or murmurs.

TO REPLACE. v. a. [replacer, French; re and place.]

1. To put again in the former place.

The earl being apprehended, upon examination cleared himself so well, as he was replaced in his government. Bacon.

The bowls, remov'd for fear,
The youths replac'd; and soon reitor'd the cheer. Dryden.

2. To put in a new place.

His gods put themselves under his protection, to be replaced in their promised Italy. Dryden.

TO REPLANT. v. a. [replanter, Fr. re and plant.] To plant anew.

Small trees being yet unripe, covered in autumn with dung until the spring, take up and replant in good ground. Bacon.

The waters

With fish replenish'd, and the air with fowl. Milton.

2. To finish; to consummate; to complete. Not proper, nor in use.

We smother'd

The most replenish'd sweet work of nature,
That from the prime creation e'er the flame'd. Shakespeare.

TO REPLENISH. v. n. To recover the former fulness. Not in use.

The humours in men's bodies increase and decrease as the moon doth; and therefore purge some day after the full; for then the humours will not replenish so soon. Bacon.

REPLETE. adj. [replete, French; repletus, Lat.] Full; completely filled; filled to exuberance.

The world's large tongue
Proclaims you for a man replet with mocks;
Full of comparisons and wounding flouts. Shakespeare.
This mordication, if not over high a degree, is little better than the corrosion of poison; as sometimes in animosity, if given to bodies not replet, with humours; for where humours abound, the humours fast the parts. Bacon's Natural History.

His words, replete with guile,
Into her heart too easy entrance won. Milton.

In a dog, out of whose eye, being wounded, the aqueous humour did copiously flow, yet in six hours the bulb of the eye was again replete with its humour, without the application of any medicines. Ray.

REPLETION. n. f. [repletion, Fr.] The state of being over full.

The tree had too much repletion, and was oppress'd with its own sap; for repletion is an enemy to generation. Bacon.

All dreams

Are from repletion and complexion bred;
From rising fumes of undigested food. Dryden.

Thirst and hunger may be satisfy'd,
But this repletion is to live deny'd. Dryden.

The action of the stomach is totally stopped by too great repletion. Arbutnot on Animents.

REPLEVABLE. adj. [replevabilis, barbarous Latin.] What may be replevined.

TO REPLEVIN. v. a. Sperfer. [replegia, replevy.] low Latin; of re and plevin, or plegir, Fr. to give a pledge.]

To take back or set at liberty, upon security, any thing seized.

That you're a beast, and turn'd to grass,
Is no strange news, nor ever was;
At least to me, who once, you know,
Did from the pound replevin you. Shakespeare.

REPLICATION. n. f. [replico, Latin.]

1. Rebound; repercussion. Not in use.

Tyber trembled underneath his banks
To hear the replication of your sounds
Made in his concave shores. Shakespeare.

2. Reply; answer.

To be demanded of a squire, what replication should be made by the son of a king? Shakespeare.

This is a replication to what Menelaus had before offered, concerning the transplantation of Ulysses to Sparta. Bacon.

TO REPLY. v. n. [repliquer, French.]

To answer; to make a return to an answer.

O man! who art thou that repliest against God? Romans, ix.

Would we ascend higher to the rest of these lewd persons, we should find what reason Castilio's painter had to reply upon the cardinal, who blamed him for putting a little too much colour into St. Peter and Paul's faces: that it was true in their life-time they were pale mortified men, but that since they were grown ruddy, by blushing at the sins of their successors. Aubrey's Sermons.

TO REPLY. v. a. To return for an answer.

Perplex'd

The tempter stood, nor had what to reply. Milton.

His trembling tongue invok'd his aide;
With his last voice Eurydice he cry'd:
Eurydice the rocks and river-banks reply'd. Dryden.

REPLY. n. f. [replique, French.] Answer; return to an answer.

But now return,

And with their faint reply this answer join. Shakespeare.
If I send him word, it was not well cut, he would send me word, he cut it to please himself: if again, it was not well cut, this is called the reply chumlin. Shakespeare.

One rises up to make replies to establish or confute what has been offered on each side of the question. Watts.

To whom with sighs, Ulysses gave reply;
Ah, why ill-fating pastime must I try? Pope.

REPLYER. n. f. [from reply.] He that answers; he that makes a return to an answer.

At an act of the commencement, the answerer gave for his question, that an aristocracy was better than...

than a monarchy: the replier did tax him, that, being a private bred man, he would give a question of state: the answerer said, that the replier did much wrong the privilege of scholars, who would be much frightened if they should give questions of nothing but such things whereon they are practiced; and added, we have heard yourself dispute of virtue, which no man will say you put much in practice.

Bacon's Apothegms.

To REPOLISH. v. a. [repolir, Fr. re and polish.] To polish again.

A hundred clock is piecemeal laid
Not to be lost, but by the maker's hand
Repolish'd, without error then to stand. Donne.

To REPORT. v. a. [rapporter, French.]

1. To noie by popular rumour.

Is it upon record? or else reported successively from age to age? Shakespeare's Richard III.

It is reported,

That good duke Humphry traitorously is murder'd.
Shakespeare.

Report, say they, and we will report it. Jeremiah.

2. To give repute.

Timotheus was well reported of by the brethren.
Acts, xvi.

A widow well reported of for good works. 1 Tim.

3. To give an account of.

There is a king in Judah; and now shall he be reported to the king. Nehemiah, vi. 7.

4. To return; to rebound; to give back.

In Tictim is a church with windows only from above, that reports the voice thirteen times, if you stand by the close end wall over against the door. Eaton.

REPORT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Rumour; popular fame.

2. Repute; publick character.

My body's mark'd

With Roman swords; and my report was once

First with the best of note. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

In all approving ourselves as the minister of God, by honour and dishonour, by evil report and good report. 2 Corinthians, iv.

3. Account returned.

Sea nymphs enter with the swelling tide;
From Thetis sent as spies to make report,
And tell the wonders of her son's reign's court. Wal.

4. Account given by lawyers of cases.

After a man has studied the general principles of the law, reading the reports of adjudged cases will richly improve his mind. Watts.

5. Sound; loud noise; repercussion.

The stronger species drowneth the lesser: the report of an ordinance, the vice. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
The lashing billows make a long report,
And beat her sides. Dryden's Cyn and Allegorie.

REPORTER. n. f. [from report.] Re-later; one that gives an account.

There she appear'd; or any reporter dar'd not for her. Shakespeare.

Rumours were raised of great discord among the nobility; for this cause the lords assembled, gave order to apprehend the reporters of these surmises. Hayward.

If I had known a thing they concealed, I should never be the reporter of it. Pope.

REPORTINGLY. adv. [from reporting.]

By common fame.

Others say thou dost deserve; and I believe it better than reportingly. Shakespeare.

REPOSE. n. f. [from repose.] The act of reposing.

Dost thou think,
If I would stand against thee, would the repose
Of my trust, virtue, or worth in thee,
Make thy words false? Shakespeare.

REPOSE. v. a. [repono, Latin.]

lay to rest.

Ye restless champions, repose you here,

Secure from worldly changes and mishaps;
Here furs, no less, than here no envy dwells. Shaksp.

Have ye chosen this place,

After the toil of battle, to repose
Your wearied virtue? Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. To place as in confidence or trust: with or on.

I repose upon your management, what is dearest to me, my fame. Dryden's Preface Annus Mirabilis.
That prince was conscious of his own integrity in the service of God, and relied on this as a foundation for that trust he reposed in him, to deliver him out of his distresses. Rogers.

3. To lodge; to lay up.

Pebbles, reposed in those cliffs amongst the earth, being not so dissoluble and more bulky, are left behind. Woodward.

To REPOSE. v. n. [reposer, French.]

1. To sleep; to be at rest.

Within a thicket I reposed; when round
I rustl'd up fall'n leaves in heap; and found,
Let fall from heaven, a sleep interminate. Chopman.

2. To rest in confidence: with on.

And, for the ways are dangerous to pass,
I do desire thy worthy company,
Upon whose faith and honour I repose. Shakespeare.

REPOSE. n. f. [repos, French.]

1. Sleep; rest; quiet.

Merciful powers!
Restrain in me the curious thoughts that nature
Gives way to in repose. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
1st hour.

Of night, and of all things now retir'd to rest,
Mind us of like repose. Milton's Paradise Lost.

I all the livelong day
Consume in meditation deep, inclusive
From human converse; nor at that of eve

2. Cause of rest.

After great lights must be great shadows, which we call reposes; because in reality the light would be tired, if attracted by a continuity of glittering objects. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

REPOSEDNESS. n. f. [from reposed.] State of being at rest.

To REPOSITE. v. a. [repositus, Lat.]

To lay up; to lodge as in a place of safety.

Others reposit their young in holes, and secure themselves also therein, because such security is wanting, their lives being sought. Dryden.

REPOSITION. n. f. [from reposit.] The act of replacing.

Being satisfied in the reposition of the bone, take care to keep it so by deligation. Wyseman's Surgery.

REPOSITORY. n. f. [repositus, French, repositorium, Latin.] A place where any thing is safely laid up.

The mind of man not being capable of having many ideas under view at once, it was necessary to have a repository to lay up those ideas. Lacke.

He can take a body to pieces, and dispose of them, to us not without the appearance of irretrievable confusion, but with respect to his own knowledge into the most regular and methodical repositions. Rogers's Sermons.

To REPOSSESS. v. a. [re and possess.]

To possess again.

How comes it now, that almost all that realm I repossess'd of them? Spenser's State of Ireland.
Her suit is now to repossess those lands,
Which we in justice cannot well deny. Shakespeare.
Nor shall my father repossess the land,
The father's fortune never to return. Pope's Odyssey.

To REPREHEND. v. a. [reprehendo,
Latin.]

1. To reprove; to chide.

All as before his fight, whose presence he offend with any the least unbecomings, we would be sure as loth as they, who most reprehend or decide, that we do. 11th Nov.

Passion for your ending thee,
For thou hast done a charitable deed. Shakespeare.
They like dumb flatterers
Which when I saw, I reprehended them;
And all'd the mayor, who meant this wilful silence? Shakespeare.

To blame; to censure.

He could not reprehend the fight; so might I strive the ground. Chapman.

I nor advise, nor reprehend the choice
Of Marley-hill. Philips.

This colour will be reprehended or encountered, by imputing to all excellencies in compositions a kind of perversity. Bacon.

To charge with as a fault: with of before the crime.

Aristippus, being reprehended of luxury by one that was not such, for that he gave six crowns for a small fish, answered, Why, what would you have given? the other said, Some twelve pence.
Aristippus said again, And six crowns is no more with me. Bacon.

REPREHENDER. n. f. [from reprehend.]

Blamer; censurer.

These fervent reprehenders of things established by publick authority, are always confident and bold-spirited men; but their confidence for the most part riseth from too much credit given to their own wits, for which cause they are seldom free from errors. Hobbs.

REPREHENSIBLE. adj. [reprehensibilis, French; reprehensibilis, Lat.] Blameable; culpable; censurable.

REPREHENSIBLENESS. n. f. [from *re-

They relieve themselves with this distinction and yet own the legal sacrifice, though representative, to be proper and real. Atterbury.

2. Bearing the character or power of another.

This council of four hundred was chosen, one hundred out of each tribe, and seems to have been a body representative of the people; though the people collectively shared a share of power. Swift.

REPRESENTATIVE. n. f.

1. One exhibiting the likeness of another.
A statue of rumour whispering an idiot in the ear, who was the representative of credulity. Addison's Freeholder.

2. One exercising the vicarious power given by another.

I wish the welfare of my country; and my morals and politics teach me to leave all that to be adjusted by our representatives above, and to divine providence. Blount to Pope.

3. That by which any thing is shown.

Difficulty must cumber this doctrine, which supposes that the perfections of God are the representatives to us, of whatever we perceive in the creatures. Locke.

REPRESENTER. n. f. [from repré-.]
1. One who shows or exhibits.

Where the real works of nature, or veritable acts of glory, are to be described, art, being but the imitator or secondary representor, must not vary from the verity. Brown.

2. One who bears a vicarious character; one who acts for another by deputation.

My muse officious ventures
On the nation's representatives. Swift.

REPRESENTMENT. n. f. [from repré-.]
Image or idea proposed, as exhibiting the likeness of something.

When it is blessed, some believe it to be the natural body of Christ; others, the blessings of Christ, his passion in representation, and his grace in real exhibition. Taylor.

We have met with some, whose reals made good their representations. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO REPRESS. v. a. [repressus, Latin; reprimer, Fr.] To crush; to put down; to subdue.

Discontents and ill blood having ased always to repress and appease in person, he was loth they should find him beyond sea. Bacon's Henry VII.

Some, taking dangers to be the only remedy against dangers, endeavoured to set up the sedition again; but they were speedily repressed, and ultimately by the sedition suppressed wholly. Hayward.

Such kings
Favour the innocent, repress the bold,
Add, while they flourish, make an age of gold. Walter.

How can I
Repress the horror of my thoughts, which fly
The sad remembrance? Dunham.

Thus long succeeding critics justly reign'd,
License repress'd, and useful laws ordain'd:
Learning and Rome alike in empire grew. Pope.

REPRESSION. n. f. [from the verb.] Repression; act of crushing. Not in use.
Vol. II.

Land outcries of injury, when they send nothing to the repress of it, is a liberty rather assumed by rage and impatience, than authorized by justice.

Governments of the Tongue.

REPRESSION. n. f. [from repress.] Act of repressing.

No declaration from myself could take place, for the due repression of these tumults. King Charles.

REPRESSIVE. adj. [from repress.] Having power to repress; acting to repress.

TO REPRIEVE. v. a. [reprandre, French.] To respite after sentence of death; to give a respite.

He cannot thinke,
Unless her prayers, whose heav'n delights to hear,
And loves to grant, relieve him from the wrath
Of greatest justice. Shakespeare.

Company, though it may relieve a man from his melancholy, yet cannot secure him from his conscience. South.

Having been condemned for his part in the late rebellion, his majesty had been pleased to reprove him with several of his friends, in order to give them their lives. Addison.

He relieves the sinner from time to time, an continuous and heaps on him the favours of his providence, in hopes that, by an act of clemency, if undeserved, he may prevail on his gratitude and repentance. Rogers's Sermons.

REPRIVE. n. f. [from the verb.] Respite after sentence of death.

In his reprive he may be so fitted,
That his soul sicken not. Shakespeare.

I hope it is some pardon or reprive
For Claudio. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure
The morning Sir John Hotham was to die, a prieve was sent to suspend the execution for three days. Clarendon.

All that I ask, is but a short reprive,
Till I forget to love, and learn to grieve. Dinham.

TO REPRIMAND. v. a. [reprimander, French; reprime, Lat.] To chide; to check; to reprehend; to reprove.

Germanicus was severely reprimanded by Tiberius, for travelling into Egypt without his permission. Aburhot.

Since no reprisals can be made on thee. Dorset.

REPRISÉ. n. f. [reprise, French.] The act of taking something in retaliation of injury.

Your care about your hands is a fear
Of threatening floods and inundations near. Hayward.

If a just repress would only be
Of what the land usurp'd upon the sea. Dryden.

TO REPROACH. v. a. [reprocher, Fr.] 1. To censure in opprobrious terms, as a crime.

Menstrual with his ardent warm'd
His fainting friends, reproach'd their shameful flight, Repell'd the victors. Dryden's Rhesus.

The French writers do not burden themselves too much with plot, which has been reproached to them as a fault. Dryden.

2. To charge with a fault in severe language.

If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye. 1 Peter, iv. 14.

That shame
There sit not, and reproach us as unclean. Milton.

3. To upbraid in general.

The very regret of being surpassed in any valuable quality, by a person of the same abilities with ourselves, will reproach our own laziness, and even shame us into imitation. Rogers.

REPROACH. n. f. [reproche, French; from the verb.] Censure; infamy; shame.

With his reproach and odious menace,
The knight embailing in his haughty heart,
Knit all his forces. Spenser.

If black scandal or foul-fac'd reproach
Attend the sequel of your imposition,
Your mere enforcement shall acquittance me. Shak.
Thou, for the testimony of truth, hast borne Universal reproach. Milton.

REPROACHABLE. adj. [reproachable, Fr.] Worthy of reproach.

REPROACHFUL. adj. [from reproach.]

1. Scurrilous; opprobrious.
O monstrous! what reproachful words are these! Shakespeare.

REPULSION. n. f. [repulsus, Lat.] The act or power of driving off from itself.

Air has some degree of tenacity, whereby the parts attract one another; at the same time, by their elasticity, the particles of air have a power of repulsion or flying off from one another.

REPULSIVE. adj. [from repulse.] Driving off; having the power to beat back or drive off.

The parts of the salt or vitriol recede from one another, and endeavour to expand themselves, and get as far asunder as the quantity of water, in which they float, will allow; and does not this endeavour imply, that they have a repulsive force by which they fly from one another, or that they attract the water more strongly than one another?

TO REPURCHASE. v. a. [re and purchase.] To buy again.

Once more we sit on England's royal throne, Repurchas'd with the blood of enemies; What valiant foe-men, like to autumn's corn, Have we mow'd down in top of all their pride?

If the son alien those lands, and repurchase them again in fee, the rules of descents are to be observed, as if he were the original purchaser.

REPUTABLE. adj. [from repute.] Honourable; not infamous.

If ever any vice shall become reputable, and be gloried in as a mark of greatness, what can we then expect from the man of honour, but to signalize himself.

In the article of danger, it is as reputable to elude an enemy as defeat one.

REPUTABLENESS. n. f. [from reputable.] The quality of a thing of good repute.

REPUTABLY. adv. [from reputable.] Without discredit.

To many such worthy magistrates, who have thus reputably filled the chief seats of power in this great city, I am now addressing my discourse.

REPUTATION. n. f. [reputation, French; from repute.]

1. Character of good or bad.

Verfey, upon the lake of Geneva, has the reputation of being extremely poor and beggarly.

2. Credit; honour.

Reputation is an idle and most false imposition; oft got without merit, and lost without deserving; you have lost no reputation at all, unless you repute yourself such a loser.

A third interprets motions, looks, and eyes; At every word a reputation dies.

TO REPUTE. v. a. [reputo, Latin; reputer, French.] To hold; to account; to think.

The king was reputed a prince most prudent. Sh. I do repute her grace

We should profane the service of the dead, To sing a requiem and such peace to her, As to peace-parted souls.

2. Rest; quiet; peace. Not in use.

The midwife kneel'd at my mother's throes, With pain produc'd and nurs'd for future woes; Else had I an eternal requiem kept, And in the arms of peace for ever slept.

REQUIRABLE. adj. [from require.] Fit to be required.

It contains the certain periods of times, and all circumstances requirable in a history to inform.

TO REQUIRE. v. a. [requiro, Lat. requerir, French.]

1. To demand; to ask a thing as of right.

Ye me require A thing without the compass of my wit; For both the lineage and the certain fire, From which I sprung, are from me hidden yet.

We do require thee of you, to use them, As we shall find their merits.

This, the very law of Nature teacheth us to do, and this the law of God requireth also at our hands.

This imply'd Subjected, but requir'd with gentle sway.

Oft our alliance other lands desire, And what we seek of you, of us requir'd.

2. To make necessary; to need.

The king's business required haste. High from the ground, the branches would Thy utmost reach.

But why, alas! do mortal men complain? God gives us what he knows our wants require.

And better things than those which we desire. God, when he gave the world in common to all mankind, commanded man altho to labour; and the penury of his condition required it.

REQUISITE. adj. [requisitus, Latin.] Necessary; needful; required by the nature of things.

When God new-modelled the world by the introduction of a new religion, and that in the room of one set up by himself, it was requisite, that he should recommend it to the reasons of men with the same authority and evidence that enforced the former.

Cold calleth the spirits to succour, and therefore they cannot so well close and go together in the head, which is ever requisite to sleep.

Prepare your soul with all those necessary graces, that are more immediately requisite to this performance.

REQUISITE. n. f. Any thing necessary. Res non parva laboris, sed sollicitudinis, was thought by a poet to be one of the requisites to a happy life.

For want of these requisites, most of our ingenious young men take up some cried up English poet, adore him, and imitate him, without knowing wherein he is defective.

God on his part has declared the requisites ours: what we must do to obtain blessings, is the great business of us all to know.

REQUISITELY. adv. [from requisite.] Necessarily; in a requisite manner.

We discern how requisitely the several parts of scripture are fitted to several times, persons and occurrences.

REQUISITENESS. n. f. [from requisite.] Necessity; the state of being requisite.

Discerning how exquisitely the several parts of scripture are fitted to the several times, persons, and occurrences intended, we shall discover not only the sense of the obscure passages, but the requisiteness of their having been written so obscurely.

REQUITAL. n. f. [from requite.]

1. Return for any good or bad office; retaliation.

Should we take the quarrel of sermons in hand, and revenge their cause by requital, thrusting prayer in a manner out of doors under colour of long preaching?

Since you Wear out your gentle limbs in my affairs, Be bold, you do so grow in my requital,

As nothing can unroot you.

We hear Such goodness of your justice, that our soul Cannot but yield you forth to publick thanks, Forrunning your requital.

2. Return; reciprocal action.

No merit their aversion can remove, Nor ill requital can efface their love.

3. Reward; recompence.

An avenger against his enemies, and one that shall requite kindness to his friends. Ecclus.

Him within protect from harms;

He can requite thee, for he knows the charms

'That call fame on such gentle acts as these. Milton.

Great idol of mankind, we neither claim

The praise of merit, nor aspire to fame'

'Tis all we beg thee to conceal from sight

Those acts of goodness which themselves requite:

O let us still the secret joy partake,

To follow virtue ev'n for virtue's sake. Pope.

Unhappy Wallace,

Great patriot hero! ill requited chief! Thomson.

2. To do or give in reciprocation.

He hath requited me evil for good. Samuel.

Open not thine heart to every man, lest he requite thee with a shrewd turn. Ecclus.

My uncles both are slain in rescuing me. Shak.

We're best with thieves;

Rescue thy mistress, if thou be a man. Shakespeare.

Dr. Bancroft understood the church excellently, and had almost rescued it out of the hands of the Calvinian party. Clarendon.

He that is so sure of his particular election, as to resolve he can never fall, if he commit those acts, against which scripture is plain, that they that do them shall not inherit eternal life, must necessarily resolve, that nothing but the removing his fundamental error can rescue him from the superstructure.

Who was that just man, whom had not heaven rescued, had in his righteousness been lost? Milton.

Riches cannot rescue from the grave,

Which claims alike the monarch and the slave. Dryden.

We have never yet heard of a tumult raised to rescue a minister whom his master desired to bring to a fair account. Davenant.

RESCUE. n. f. [rescousse, rescousse, old French; rescussus, low Latin.] Deliverance from violence, danger, or confinement.

How comes it, you

Have help to make this rescue? Shakespeare.

RESCUER. n. f. [from rescue.] One that rescues.

RESEARCH. n. f. [recherche, Fr.] Enquiry; search.

By a skilful application of those notices, may be gained in such researches the accelerating and heating of fruits, emptying mines, and draining fens. Glanville's Sceptis.

I submit those mistakes, into which I may have fallen, to the better consideration of others, who shall have made research into this business with more felicity. Halder.

A felicity adapted to every rank, such as the researches of human wisdom sought for, but could not discover. Topers.

TO RESEARCH. v. a. [recherche, Fr.] To examine; to enquire.

It is not easy to research with due distinction, in the actions of eminent personages, both how much they may have been blighted by the envy of others, and what was corrupted by their own felicity. Wotton's Buckingham.

TO RESEAT. v. a. [re and seat.] To seat again.

When he's produc'd, will you reseat him

Upon his father's throne? Dryden.

RESEIZURE. n. f. One that seizes again.

RESEIZURE. n. f. [re and seizure.] Repeated seizure; seizure a second time.

Here we have the charter of foundation; it is now the more easy to judge of the forfeiture of re-seizure: deface the image, and you defile the right. Bacon.

RESEMBLANCE. n. f. [resemblance, Fr.]

1. Likeness; similitude; representation.

One main end of poetry and painting is to please; they bear a great resemblance to each other. Dryden's Duffenoy.

The quality produced hath commonly no resemblance with the thing producing it; wherefore we look on it as a bare effect of power. Locke.

So chymists boast they have a pow'r,

From the dead ashes of a flow'r,

Some faint resemblance to produce,

But not the virtue. Swift's Miscellanies.

I cannot help remarking the resemblance betwixt him and our author in qualities, fame, and fortune. Pope.

2. Something resembling.

These sensible things, which religion hath allowed, are resemblances formed according to things spiritual, whereunto they serve as a hand to lead, and a way to direct. Hooker.

Faint resemblances of thy Maker fair,

These all things living gaze on. Milton.

They are but weak resemblances of our intentions, faint and imperfect copies that may acquaint us with the general design, but can never express the life of the original. Addison.

TO RESEMBLE. v. a. [resembler, French.]

1. To compare; to represent as like something else.

Most safely may we resemble ourselves to God, in respect of that pure faculty, which is never separate from the love of God. Raleigh.

The torrid parts of Africk are resembled to a libbard's skin, the distance of whose spots represents the dissimilitude of habitations. Everard.

2. To be like; to have likeness to.

If we see a man of virtues, mixed with infirmities, fall into misfortune, we are afraid that like misfortunes may happen to ourselves, who resemble the character. Addison.

TO RESEND. v. a. [re and send.] To send back; to send again. Not in use.

I sent to her, by this same coxcomb,

Tokens and letters, which she did resend. Shakespeare.

TO RESENT. v. a. [ressentir, French.]

His thunder, to the god of love. Danbam.
Ev'ry Iphigenia would resign her breast;
And ev'ry dear Hippolytus be blest. Prior.

2. To yield up.

Whoever shall resign their reasons, either from the root of deceit in themselves, or inability to resist such trivial inganctions from others, although their condition may place them above the multitude, yet are they still within the line of vulgarity. Brown.
Desirous to resign and render back
All I receiv'd. Milt.

Those, who always resign their judgment to the last man they heard or read, truth never sinks into those men's minds; but, camelion-like, they take the colour of what is laid before them, and as soon lose and resign it to the next that comes in their way. Locke.

3. To give up in confidence: with up em-phatical.

What more reasonable, than that we should in all things resign up ourselves to the will of God? Tillot.

of the king's majesty's sisters and others, entitled to the possession of the crown. Haywood.

2. Submission; unresisting acquiescence.

We cannot resign, that any one should readily quit his own opinion, and embrace ours, with a blind resignation to an authority, which the understanding acknowledges not. Locke.

There is a kind of sluggish resignation, as well as slothfulness and degeneracy of spirit, in a state of torpor, that very few will recover themselves out of.

Submission without murmur to the will God.

RESIGNER. n. f. [from resign.] One

James, iv.

To do ill our sole delight,
As being the contrary, to his high will Whom we resist. Milton.

Not more almighty to resist our might,
Than our to frustrate all our plots and wiles. Milt.
Some forms, tho' bright, no mortal man can beat,
Some, none resist, tho' not exceeding fair. Young.

2. Not to admit impression or force.

Nor keen nor solid could resist that edge. Milton.

TO RESIST. v. n. To make opposition.

All the regions
Do seemingly revolt; and, who resist,
Are mock'd for valiant ignorance,
And perish constant fools. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

RESISTANCE. } n. f. [resistance, French.
RESISTENCE. } This word, like many others, is differently written, as it is supposed to have come from the Latin or the French.]

1. The act of resisting; opposition.
Demetrius, seeing that the land was quiet, and that no resistance was made against him, sent away all his forces. Mac.

2. The quality of not yielding to force or external impression.
The resistance of bone to cold is greater than of flesh, for that the flesh shrinketh but the bone resisteth, whereby the cold becometh more eager.

Musick so softens and disarms the mind,
That not an arrow does resist it find. Wallr.
The idea of solidity we receive by our touch; and it arises from the resistance which we find in body to the entrance of any other body into the place it possesses. Locke.

But that part of the resistance, which arises from the vis inertia, is proportional to the density of the matter, and cannot be diminished by dividing the matter into smaller parts, nor by any other means, than by decreasing the density of the medium.

Newton's Opticks.

RESISTIBILITY. n. f. [from resistible.]

1. Quality of resisting.

Whether the resistibility of Adam's reason did not equivalence the facility of Eve's seduction, we refer unto schoolmen. Brown.

The name body, being the complex idea of extension and resistibility, together, in the same subject, these two ideas are not exactly one and the same. Locke.

2. Quality of being resistible.

It is from corruption, and liberty to do evil, meeting with the resistibility of this sufficient grace,
that one resists it. Hammond.

RESISTIBLE. adj. [from resist.] That may be resisted.

That is irresistible; this, though potent, yet is in its own nature resistible by the will of man;
though it many times prevails by its efficacy.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

RESISTLESS. adj. [from resist.] Irresistible; that cannot be opposed.

Our own eyes do every where behold the sudden and resistless assaults of death. Raleigh.
All at once to force resistless way. Milton.

Since you can love, and yet your error see,
The same resistless power may plead for me. Dryden.
She chang'd her state;

Resistless in her love, as in her hate. Dryden.

Though thine eyes resistless glances dart,
A stronger charm is thine, a generous heart. Logie.

RESOLVABLE. adj. [from resolver.]

gratitude, that the actions of ingratitude seem directly resolvable into pride, as the principal reason of them. Swift.

2. Dissoluble; admitting separation of parts.

As the serum of the blood is resolvable by a small heat, a greater heat coagulates, so as to turn it horny like parchment. Arbuthnot.

3. Capable of solution, or of being made less obscure.

The effect is wonderful in all, and the causes best resolvable from observations made in the countries themselves, the parts through which they pass.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

RESOLUBLE. adj. [resoluble, French; re- solubilis, Latin.] That may be melted or dissolved.

Three is not precisely the number of the distinct elements, whereinto mixt bodies are resolvable by fire.

Boyle.

TO RESOLVE. v. a. [resolvo, Latin;
resoudre, Fr.]

1. To inform; to free from a doubt or difficulty.

In all things then are our consciences best re- solved, and in most agreeable sort unto God and nature resolved, when they are so far persuaded, as those grounds of persuasion will bear. Hooker.

Give me some breath,

Before I positively speak in this;

I will resolve your grace immediately. Shakespeare.

I cannot brook delay, resolve me now;

And what your pleasure is, shall satisfy me. Shak.

Ris' see me, strangers, whence and what you are?

Dryden.

2. To solve; to clear.

Examine, first, and resolve their alleged proofs, till you come to the very root whence they spring, and it shall clearly appear, that the most which can be inferred upon such plenty of divine testimonies, is only this, that resolves their alleged proofs.

min, do seem to have been out of scripture not altogether gathered.

I resolve the riddle of their loyalty, and give them opportunity to let the world see, they mean not what they do, but what they say. King Charles.

He always bent himself rather judiciously to resolve, than by doubts to perplex a business.

The graves, when they have attained to the knowledge of these repeses, will easily resolve those difficulties which perplex them. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

The man who would resolve the work of fate, May limit number.

Happiness, it was resolved by all, must be some one uniform end, proportioned to the capacities of human nature, attainable by every man, independent on fortune.

3. To settle in an opinion.

Good or evil actions, commanded or prohibited by laws and precepts simply moral, may be resolved into some dictates and principles of the law of nature, imprinted on man's heart at the creation.

Long since we were resolved of your truth, Your faithful service, and your toil in war.

4. To fix in a determination. This sense is rather neutral, though in these examples the form be passive.

TO RESPECT. v. a. [respectus, Latin.]

1. To regard; to have regard to.

Cassio, I quake,
Lest thou shouldst seven winters more respect
Than a perpetual honour. Shakespeare.

The best gods do not love
Ungodly actions; but respect the right,
And in the works of pious men delight. Chapman.

In orchards and gardens we do not so much respect beauty, as variety of ground for fruits, trees, and herbs. Bacon.

In judgment-seats, not men's qualities, but causes only ought to be respected. Kettelwell's.

2. [Respecter, Fr.] To consider with a lower degree of reverence.

There is nothing more terrible to a guilty heart, than the eye of a respected friend. Sidney.

Whoever tastes, let him with grateful heart
Respect that ancient loyal house. Phillips.

I always loved and respected Sir William. Swift.

3. To have relation to: as, the allusion respects an ancient custom.

4. To look toward.

The needle doth vary, as it approacheth the pole:
whereas, were there such direction from the rocks, upon a nearer approachment, it would more directly respect them. Brown.

You have too much respect upon the world;
They lose it, that do buy it with much care. Sh.

I love
My country's good with a respect more tender
Than mine own life. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

2. Reverence; honour.

You know me dutiful, therefore Let me not shame respect; but give me leave
To take that course by your consent and voice. Shakespeare.

Aeneas must be drawn a suppliant to Dido, with respect in his gestures, and humility in his eyes. Dryden's Dufresne y.

I found the king abandon'd to neglect;
Seen without awe, and serv'd without respect. Prior.

The same men treat the Lord's-day with as little respect, and make the advantage of rest and leisure from their worldly affairs only an instrument to promote their pleasure and diversions. Nelson.

3. Awful kindness.

He, that will have his son have a respect for him, must have a great reverence for his son. Locke.

For that my grandfire was an Englishman,
Awakes my conscience to confess all this. Shakespeare.

Since that respects of fortune are his love,
I shall not be his wife. Shakespeare's King Lear.

9. Relation; regard.

In respect of the suitors which attend you, do them what right in justice, and with as much speed
as you may. Bacon.

There have been always monsters amongst them,
in respect of their bodies. Wilkins.

I have represented to you the excellency of the christian religion, in respect of its clear discoveries of the nature of God, and in respect of the perfection of its laws. Tillotson.

Every thing which is imperfect, as the world must be acknowledged in many respects, had some cause which produced it. Tillotson.

They believed but one Supreme deity, which,
with respect to the various benefits then received from him, had several titles. Tillotson.

RESPECTABLE. adj. [respectable, Fr.]
Venerable; meriting respect.

RESPECTER. n. s. [from respect.] One that has partial regard.

Neither is any condition more honourable in the sight of God than another; otherwise he would be a respecter of persons, for he hath proposed the same salvation to all. Swift.

RESPECTFUL. adj. [respect and full.]
Ceremonious; full of outward civility.

Will you be only, and for ever mine?
From this dear bosom shall I ne'er be torn?
Or you grow cold, respectful, or forsown? Prior.

With humble joy, and with respectful tear,
The listening people shall his story hear. Prior.

RESPECTFULLY. adv. [from respectful.]
With some degree of reverence.

To your glad genius sacrifice this day,
Let common meats respectfully give way. Dryden.

The quality of being respectful.

RESPECTIVE. adj. [from respect.]

1. Particular; relating to particular persons or things.

Moses mentions the immediate causes, and St.
Peter the more remote and fundamental causes, that constitution of the heavens, and that constitution of the earth, in reference to their respective waters, which made that world obnoxious to a deluge. Burnet.

When so many present themselves before their respective magistrates to take the oaths, it may not be improper to awaken a due sense of their engagements. Addison.

2. [Respectif, French.] Relative; not absolute.

The medium intended is not an absolute, but a relative medium; the proportion recommended to all is the same; but the things to be desired in this proportion will vary. Rogers.

3. Worthy of reverence. Not in use.

What should it be, that he respects in her,
But I can make respectful in myself? Shakespeare.

4. Careful; cautious; attentive to consequences. Obsolete.

Respective and wary men had rather seek quietly their own, and wish that the world may go well, to it be not long of them, than with pain and hazard make themselves advisers for the common good. Hooker.

He was exceeding respectful and precise. Ruley's.

RESPECTIVELY. adv. [from respective.]

1. Particularly; as each belongs to each.

The interruption of trade between the English and Flemish began to pinch the merchants of both nations, which moved them by all means to dispose their sovereigns respectively to open the intercourse again. Baron.

The impressions from the objects of the senses do mingle respectively every one with his kind. Bacon's Natural History.

Good and evil are in morality, as the East and West are in the frame of the world, founded in and divided by that fixed and unalterable situation, which they have respectively in the whole body of the universe. Saunders's Sermons.

The principles of those governments are respectively disclaimed and abhorred by all men of sense and virtue in both parties. Addison.

2. Relatively; not absolutely.

If there had been no other choice, but that Adam had been left to the universal, Moses would not than

then have said, eastward in Eden, seeing the world hath not East nor West, but respectively. Raleigh.

3. Partially; with respect to private views. Obsolete.

Among the ministers themselves, one being so far in estimation above the rest, the voices of the rest were likely to be given for the most part respectively with a kind of secret dependency. Holker.

1. Reprieve; suspension of a capital sentence.

I had hope to spend
Quiet, though sad, the respite of that day,
That must be mortal to us both. Milton.
Whilom and eloquence in vain would plead
One moment's respite for the lanced head,
Judges of writing and of men have dy'd. Pope.

2. Pause; interval.

The fox then counsel'd th' ape, how to require
Respite till morrow's answer he desired. Spenser.
This customary war, which troubleth all the world, giveth little respite or breathing time of peace, doth usually borrow pretence from the necessary, to make itself appear more honest. Raleigh.
Some pause and respite only I require,
Till with my tears I shall have quench'd my fire. Lucan.

To RESPI'TE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To relieve by a pause.

In what bow'r or shade
Thou find'st him, from the heat of noon retir'd,

RESPL'NDENCY. dent. Lustre; brightness; splendour.

Son! thou in whom my glory I behold
In full resplendency, here of all my might. Milton.
To neglect that fort in resplendency, that flows in God, for those dim representations of it in the creature, is as absurd as it were for a Persian to offer his sacrifice to a parhelion instead of adoring
the sun. Byron.

RESPL'NDENT. adj. [resplendens, Latin.] Bright; shining; having a beautiful lustre.

Rich in commodities, beautiful in situation,
resplendent in all glory. Comenius's Rhetoric.

the congregation, speaking alternately with the priest in publick worship.

To make his prisoners kneel and join in the responses he gave every one of them a halbeck and communion prayer book. Atterton.

3. Reply to an objection in a formal disputation.

Let the respondent not turn opponent; except in retorting the argument upon his adversary after a direct response; and even this is allowed only as a confirmation of his own response. Watts.

RESPON'SIVE. adj. [from responso, Latin.]

1. Answerable; accountable.

Persons, who have certainly the talent of natural knowledge, are responsive for it. Harmer.
He as much satisfies the itch of telling news; he as much persuades his hearer; and all this while he has his retreat secure, and stands not responsive for the truth of his relations. Clarendon.

2. Capable of discharging an obligation.

The necessity of a proportion of money to trade depends on money as a pledge, which writing cannot supply the place of. Since the bill, I receive from one man, will not be accepted as security by another, he not knowing that the bill is legal, or that the man bound is honest or responsive. Locke.

RESPON'SIBLE. n. f. [from responso, Latin.]

This answer would tend to their counsels of less reverence to the people, if upon those reasons they should restle from what they had, with that confidence and disdain of the house of peers, demand of the king, they therefore resolved to set up their rest upon that stake, and to go through with it, or perish in the attempt. Lat. n.

9. [Reste, French; quod restat, Latin.] Remainder; what remains.

Reliqua gives part of its reward in hand, the present comfort of having done our duty; and for the rest, it offers us the best security that heaven can give. Lat. n.

The pow'r in glory shone,
By her bent bow and her keen arrows known,
The rest a huntress. Dryden's King's Tale.

precise notions of things, which the mind may rest upon, and be satisfied with, in its search after knowledge. Locke.

9. [Resto, Latin; rester, Fr.] To be left; to remain.

Fall'n he is; and now
What rests, but that the mortal sentence pass
On his intregation? Milton's Paradise Lost.

There rests the comparative, that is, its being erected, that it is either lawful or binding, yet whether other things be not preferred before it, as certification of laws. Bacon.

To REST. v. a.

1. To lay to rest

Your piety has paid
All needful rites, to my mind and ring shade. Dryden.

2. To place as on a support.

As the sun, to find repose, at last,
Itself into Augustus' arms did cast,
So England now doth, with like toil oppress'd,
Her weary head upon your bosom rest. Wallis.

The protestants, having well studied the father, were now willing to rest their cause, not upon scripture only, but fathers too, to far at least as the three first centuries. Waterland.

Here rests his head upon the lap of earth,
A youth to fortune and to fame unknown. Gray.

RESTAIGNANT. adj. [restagnans, Latin.]

Remaining without flow or motion Upon the tops of high mountains, the air, which bears against the restagnant quicksilver, is less pressed by the less ponderous incumbent air. Boyle.

To RESTAIGNATE. v. n. [re and flag-nate.] To stand without flow.

The blood returns thick, and is apt to restagnate.
W. J. m.

RESTAGNATION. n. f. [from restagnate.]

The state of standing without flow, course, or motion.

RESTAURATION. n. f. [restauratio, Latin.]

The act of recovering to the former state.

Adam is in an original cause of our nature, and of that corruption of nature which causeth death;
Christ is the cause original of restoration to life. Hooker.

O my dear father! restoration hang Thy m' d'ne on my lips, and let this kiss
Repair the violent harms, that my two sisters
I ave thy reverence made. Shakespeare.

Spermatical parts will not admit a regeneration, much less will they receive an integral restoration. Brown.

To RESTE'M. v. a. [re and stem.] To force back against the current.

How they restem
Their backward course, bearing with frank appearance

Toward Cyprus. Shakespeare's Othello.

RESTFUL. adj. [rest and full.] Quiet; being at rest.

Is not my arm of length,
That reacheth from the restful English court,
As far as Calais to my uncle's head? Shakespeare.

RISTHARROW. n. f. A plant.

RESTIFF. adj. [restif, French; restivo, Italian.]

1. Unwilling to stir; resolute against going forward; obstinate; stubborn. It is originally used of an horse, that, though not wearied, will not be driven forward.

All, who before him did ascend the throne,
Labour'd to draw three restless nations on. Religion.

This restiff stubbornness is never to be excus'd under any pretence whatsoever. L'Estrange.

Some, with studious care,
Their restiff steeds in sandy plains prepare. Dryden.

The archangel, when discord was stirr'd, would not be drawn from her beloved monastery with fair words, drags her out with noisy steps. Dryden's Dehucation to Jerusalem.

So James the drowy genius wakes
Of Britain, long entranc'd in charms, Rest, and slumbering on its arms. Dryden.

The pamper'd colt will discipline disdain,
Impatient of the lash, and restiff to the rein. Dryden.

2. Being at rest; being less in motion.

Not used.

Pallies ofteneft happen upon the left side, the most vigorous part protecting itself, and promulgating the matter upon the weaker, and restive side. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

RESTIFNESS. n. f. [from restiff] Obstinate reluctance.

Overt virtues bring forth praise; but secret virtues bring forth fortune: certain deliveries of a man's self, which the Spanish name desembolura, partly expresseth, where there be not stands nor restiveness in a man's nature, but the wheels of his mind keep way with the wheels of his fortune. Lat.

That it gave occasion to some men's further restiveness, is imputable to their own depraved tempers. King Charles.

RESTINCTION. n. f. [restinctus, Latin.]

The act of extinguishing.

RESTITUTION. n. f. [restitutio, Latin.]

1. The act of restoring what is lost or taken away.

To subvert an usurper, should be no unjust enterprise or wrongful war, but a restitution of ancient rights unto the crown of England, from whence they were most unjustly expelled and long kept out. Spenser on Ireland.

He would pawn his fortunes
To hopelet restitution, so he might Be call'd your vanquisher. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

He restitution to the value makes;
Nor joy in his extorted treasure takes. Sandys.

Whoever is an effective real cause of doing a neighbour wrong, by what instrument soever he does it, is bound to make restitution. Taylor.

In case our offence against God hath been complicated with injury to men, it is but reasonable we should make restitution. Tillotson.

A great man, who has never been known willingly to pay a just debt, ought not all of a sudden to be introduced, making restitution of thousands he has cheated: let it suffice to pay twenty pounds to a tumbler, who has lost his note. Lat. n.

2. The

2. The act of recovering its former state or posture.

In the woody parts of plants, which are their bones, the principles are so compounded, as to make them flexible without joints, and also elastick, that so their roots may yield to slopes, and their trunks to the wind, with a power of refstitution. Grew.

RESTLESS. adj. [from refl.]

1. Being without sleep.

Refless he pass'd the remnants of the night,
Till the fresh air proclaim'd the morning nigh:
And burning ships, the martyrs of the night,
With paler fires beheld the eastern sky. Dryden.

2. Unquiet; without peace.

Lade to the body some, none to the mind
From refless thoughts, that like a deadly swarm
Of hornets arm'd, no sooner found alone,
But rush upon me thronging, and present
Times past, what once I was, and what I'm now.

Could we not wake from that lethargick dream,
But to be refless, in a worse extreme? Dinham.

We find our souls disordered and refless, tossed and disquieted by passions, ever seeking happiness in the enjoyments of this world, and ever missing what they seek. Atterbury.

What tongue can speak the refless monarch's woes,
When God and Nathan were declar'd his foes? Prior.

3. Unconflant; unsettled.

He was stout of courage, strong of hand,
Bold was his heart, and refless was his sight. Fairf.
He's proud, fantastick, apt to change,
Refless at home, and ever prone to range. Dryden.

4. Not still; in continual motion.

How could nature on their orbs impose
Such refless revolution, day by day Repeated? Milton.

RESTLESSLY. adv. [from refless.] Without rest; unquietly.

When the mind casts and turns itself reflessly from one thing to another, retains this power of the soul to apprehend, that to judge, another to advise, a fourth to remember: thus tracing out the time and space observ'd difference of some things, and the real agreement of others; at length it brings all the ends of a long hypothesis together. South.

RESTLESSNESS. n. f. [from refless.]

1. Want of sleep.

Refless and intermission from sleep, griev'd persons are molested with, whereby the blood is dried. Harey.

2. Want of rest; unquietness.

Let him keep the rest,
But keep them with repining *refless*ness?
Let him be men and weary, that at least,
If goodness lead him not, yet wean him,
May not him to my bliss. Harbert.
Let him be in bed, in hopes relief to find,
But *refless*ness was mistress of my mind. Harte.

3. Motion; agitation.

The trembling *refless*ness of the needle, in any but the north point of the compass, manifests its inclination to the pole; which its wave long and it zeit bear equal witness to. Fyfe.

RESTORABLE. adj. [from refstore.] What may be restored.

By cutting turf without any regularity, great quantities of restorable land are made utterly dispe-rate. Swiss.

RESTORATION. n. f. [from refstore; restauration, French.]

1. The act of replacing in a former state.

This is properly restauration.
Hail, royal Albion, hail to thee,
Thy longing people's expectation!
Sent from the gods to set us free
From bondage and from usurpation:
Behold the different climates agree,
Rejoicing in thy restoration. Dryden's Albur.
The Athenians, now deprived of the only person that was able to recover their losses, repent of their rashness, and endeavour in vain for his restoration. Swift.

2. Recovery.

The change is great in this refstoration of the man, from a state of spiritual darkness, to a capacity of perceiving divine truth. Rogers.

RESTORATIVE. adj. [from refstore.] That which has the power to recruit life.

Their taste no knowledge works at out of evil,
But life preferre, detests life's enemy,
Hunger, with sweet refstative delight. Miln.

RESTORATIVE. n. f. [from refstore.] A medicine that has the power of recruiting life.

I will kiss thy lips;
Haply some poison yet doth hang on them,
To make me die with a refstative. Shakespeare.

God saw it necessary by such mortifications to quench the boundless rage of an insatiable intemperance, to make the weakness of the flesh, the physick and refstorative of the spirit. South.

Asses milk is an excellent refstoration in consumptions. Miln.

He prescribes an English gallon of asses' milk, especially as a refstative. Abraham.

TO RESTORE. v. a. [from refstore, Fl. restauro, Latin.]

1. To give back what has been lost or taken away.

Refstore the man his wife. Genesis, ix. 7.
He shall refstore in the principal, and add the fifth part more. Leviticus, vi. 5.

She lands him on his native shores,
And to his father's longing arms refstores. Dryden.

2. To bring back.

The father banish'd virtue shall refstore,
And crimes shall threat the guilty world no more. Dryden.

Thus pencils can, by one slight touch, refstore
Smiles to that changed face, that wept before. Dryd.

3. To retrieve; to bring back from degener- eration, declension, or ruin, to its former state.

Loss of Eden, till one greater man
Refstore it, and regain the blissful seat. Milton.

Th' archangel paid
Between the world destroy'd and world *refstore*d. Miln.

These artificial experiments are but so many experiments, whereby men attempt to refstore themselves from the first general curse inflicted upon their labours. Wilk's Mathematical Magick.

In his Odyssey, Homer explains, that the hardest difficulties may be overcome by labour, and our fortune *refstore*d after the severest afflictions. Prior.

4. To cure; to recover from disease.

Garth, faster than a plague destroys, refstores. Gran.

5. To recover passages in books from cor- ruption.

RESTORER. n. f. [from refstore.] One that restores; one that recovers the lost, or repairs the decayed.

Next to the Son,
Destin'd refstore of mankind, by whom
New heav'n and earth shall to the ages rise. Milton.
I foretel you, as the refstore of poetry. Dryden.

Here are ten thousand persons reduced to the necessity of a low diet and moderate exercise, who are the only great *refstore*s of our breed, without which the nation would in an age become one great hospital. Swift.

TO RESTRAIN. v. a. [from refstrain, Fr. refringer, Latin.]

1. To withhold; to keep in.

If the *refstrain*d the riots of your followers,
'Tis to such wholesome end as clears her. Shakspr.
The gods will plague thee,
That thou *refstrain*st from me the duty, which
'To a mother's part belong. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

2. To repress; to keep in awe.

The law of nature would be in vain, if there were no body that, in the state of nature, had a power to execute that law, and then to preserve the innocent and refstrain the wicked. Locke.

That all men may be *refstrain*d from doing harm to one another, the execution of the law of nature is in that state put into every man's hand, so that every one has a right to punish the transgressor with such a degree of force as may be necessary.

3. To suppress; to hinder; to repress.

Miscellaneous power.

Refstrain in the midst of thoughts of nature Gave way to his reveries. South's Sermon.

Comparison put him up to tears.
A piece, the first of which *refstrain*d the whole. Harte.

4. To abridge.

Me or my law of justice the *refstrain*d,
And paid no debt. Shakspeare.

Though they were *refstrain*d, a *refstrain*d framed or their life, yet the *refstrain*d too much of the humour of the world. Clarendon.

5. To pull up.

This horse, and a half, *refstrain*d a bit, and a head all of it, *refstrain*d, *refstrain*d, *refstrain*d, to keep him from the *refstrain*d, *refstrain*d, *refstrain*d, but, and now *refstrain*d, *refstrain*d, *refstrain*d. Shakspeare.

6. To limit, to restrain.

We refstrain it to that only duty, which all men, by force of nature, undertake to be such duties as concern all men. Harte.

Upon what point of duty he promises himself a future repentance, he cannot surmise himself a future, which he depends upon his body, and is *refstrain*d to the present, that it cannot secure to itself the reward of the very next moment. South.

Not only a metaphysical or natural, but a moral universality also, is to be *refstrain*d by a part of the predicate; as in the lessons are politicians, that is, those among the *refstrain*d, who are politicians, are subtle politicians; i.e. they are generally so.

RESTRAINABLE. adj. [from refstrain.] Capable to be restrained.

Therein we must not deny a liberty; nor is the hand of the painter more *refstrain*able, than the pen of the poet. Brown.

RESTRAINABLY. adv. [from refstrain.] With restraint; without latitude.

That Christ's dying for all is the express doctrine of the scripture, is manifest by the world, which is a word of the wisest extent, and although it be sometimes used more *refstrain*ably, yet never doth signify a far smaller proportionable part of the world. Hammond.

RESTRAINER. n. f. [from refstrain.] One that restrains; one that withholds.

If nothing can relieve us, we must with patience submit unto that restraint, and expect the will of the *refstrain*er. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

RESTRAINT. n. f. [from refstrain; restraint, French.]

1. Abridgement of liberty.

She will well excuse,
Why at this time the doors are barr'd against you:
Depart in patience,
And about evening come yourself alone,
To know the reason of this strange refstraint. Shaks.

I request
Th' enfranchisement of Arthur, whose refstraint
Doth move the murmuring lips of discontent. Shaks.

It is to no purpose to lay refstraints on give privileges to men, in such general terms, as the particular persons concerned cannot be known by. Locke.

I think it a manifest disadvantage, and a great refstraint upon us. Locke on the Clarks.

2. Prohibition.

What mov'd our parents to transgress his will
For one refstraint, lord of the world besides? Milton.

3. Limitation; restriction.

If all were granted, yet it must be maintained within any bold refstraints, far otherwise than it is received. Brown.

4. Repression; hindrance of will; act of withholding; state of being withheld.

There is no refrain to the Lord to save, by many by Samuel, xiv. 6.

Thus it shall befall
Her who, worth in woman overtrusting,
Let her will rule; refrain she will not brook. Milk
Is there any thing, which reflects a greater lustre Upon a man's person, than a severe temperance and A refrain of himself from vicious pleasures? South.
TO RESIRICT. v. a. [restrictus, Lat.]
To limit; to confine. A word scarce English.

In the enumeration of constitutions in this chapter, there is not one that can be limited and resirict by such a distinction, nor can perhaps the same person, in different circumstances, be properly contained to one or the other. South.

RESIRICTION. n. f. [restriction, French.]
Confinement; limitation.

This is to have the same restriction with all other recreations, that it be not a diversion, not a trade. South.

Iron manufacture, of all others, ought the least to be encouraged in Ireland, or, if it be, it quicks the most restriction to certain parts. South.

All duties are matter of conscience, with this restriction, that a superior obligation suspend the force of an inferior. South.

Each other get which God on man bestows,
Its proper bounds and due restriction knows;
To one fix'd purpose it directs its power. Prior.

Celsus's rule, with the proper restriction, is good for people in health. South.

RESTRICTIVE. adj. [from restrict.]

1. Expressing limitation.

They, who would make the restrictive particle belong to the latter clause, and not to the first, do not attend to the reason. South.

2. [Restrictif, Fr.] Styptic; astringent.
I applied a plaster over it, made up with my common restrictive powder. South.

RESTRICTIVELY. adv. [from restrictive.]
With limitation.

All speech, tending to the glory of God or the good of man, is aight directed, which is not to be understood to restrictively, as if nothing but divinity, or necessary concerns of life, may lawfully be brought into discourse. South.

TO RESTRING. v. a. [restringo, Latin.]

To confine; to contract; to abridge.

RESTRINGENT. n. f. [restringens, Latin;
restringent, French.] That which hath the power of contracting; styptic.

The two latter indicate phlebotomy for revulsion, restringent to stretch, and restringent to stretch in the blood. South.

RESIST. adj. [resist, Fr.] Obdurate in standing still. See RESISTANCE.

Come, our stomachs

Will make what's homely favour, we'll dress

Can move upon the flint, when resist, South.

Finds the down pillow hard. South.

Have not other hands been tried and found resist?

but we stick at nothing. South.

Men of discretion, whom people in power may with little ceremony load a heavy is they please, find them neither resist nor vicious. South.

TO RESUBLIME. v. a. [re and sublime.]

To sublime another time.

When mercury sublimate is resublimed with fresh mercury, it becomes a resublimed dux, which is a white tasteless earth, dissolvable in water, and mercurius dulcis resublimed with spirit of salt turns into mercury sublimate. South.

TO RESULT. v. n. [result, French; re- sult, Latin.]

To fly back.

With many a weary step, and many a groan,

High as he leaves a huge round stone,

Large round stone, resulting with a bound,

Sters impetuous down, and strikes along the grounds. South.

2. [Result, French.] To rise as a consequence; to be produced as the effect of causes jointly concurring.

Rue prospers much, if set by a fig tree; which is caused, not by reason of friendship, but by extraction of a contrary juice; the one drawing juice fit to result sweet, the other bitter. South.
Such huge extremes, when nature doth unite,
Wonder from thence results, from thence delight. South.

Upon the dissolution of the first earth, this very face of things would immediately result. South.

Peace and peace do naturally result from a holy and good life. South.

The honor of an object may overbear the pleasure
resulting from its greatness. South.

Their effects are often very disproportionate to the principles and parts that result from the analysis. South.

3. To arise as a conclusion from premises.

RESULT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Resilience; act of flying back.

Sound is produced between the string and the air, by the return or the result of the string, which was strained by the touch to his former place. South.

2. Consequence; effect produced by the concurrence of co-operating causes.

Did my judgment tell me, that the propositions sent to me were the results of the major part of their votes, I should then not suspect my own judgment for not speedily concurring with them. South.

As in perfumes, compos'd with art and cost,

'Tis hard to say what scent is uppermost,

Nor this part musk or civet can we call,

Or amber, but a rich result of all;

So the was all a sweet, whose every part,

In due proportion mix'd, proclaim'd the maker's art. South.

Buying of land is the result of a full and satiated pilot; men in trade seldom buy out money upon land, until their profit has brought in more than trade can employ. South.

3. Inference from premises.

These things are a result or judgment upon fact. South.

4. Resolve; decision. Improper.

Rude, passionate, and mistaken results have, at certain times, fallen from great assemblies. South.

RESULTANCE. n. f. [resultance, French.]

The act of resulting.

RESUMABLE. adj. [from resume.] What may be taken back.

This was but an indulgence, and therefore

resumable by the victor, unless there intervened any capitulation to the contrary. South.

TO RESUME. v. a. [resumo, Latin.]

1. To take back what has been given.

The sun, like this, from which our sight we have,

Gas'd on too long, resumes the light he gave. South.

So's not my love, how time resumes

The glory which he lent these flowers,

Though none should taste of their perfumes,

Yet must they live but some few hours:

Time, what we forbear, devour. South.

2. To take back what has been taken away.

That opportunity,

Which then they had to take from 's, to resume

We have again. South.

There's resum what has been obtained fraudulently,

by surprise and upon wrong suggestions. South.

3. To take again.

He'll enter into glory and resume his seat. South.

At this, with look serene, he rais'd his head,

Reason resum'd her place and passion fled. South.

4. Dryden uses it with again, but improperly, unless the re-emption be repeated.

To him our common grandfire of the main

Had giv'n to change his form, and chang'd, resume

again. South.

5. To begin again what was broken off;
as, to resume a discourse.

RESUMPTION. n. f. [resumption, Fr.
resumptus, Lat.] The act of resuming.

If there be any fault, it is the resumption or the dwelling too long upon his arguments. South.

The universal voice of the people seeming to call for some kind of resumption, the writers of these papers thought it might not be unreasonable to publish a discourse upon grants. South.

RESUMPTIVE. adj. [resumptus, Latin.]

Taking back.

RESUPINATION. n. f. [resupino, Latin.]

The act of lying on the back.

TO RESURVEY. v. a. [re and survey.]

To review; to survey again.

I have, with curious eye, o'erglanc'd the articles;

Appoint some of your council presently

To sit with us, once more with better heed

To resurvey them. South.

RESURRECTION. n. f. [resurrection, French; resurrectum, Latin.] Revival

from the dead; return from the grave.

The Sadducees were given, that they taught,

and preached through Jesus the resurrection from the dead. South.

Nor after resurrection shall he stay

Longer on earth, than resurrection can appear

To his disciples. South.

He triumphs in his agonies, whilst the soul springs forward to the great object which the has a ways had in view, and leaves the body with an expectation of being reunited to her in a glorious and joyful resur- rection. South.

Perhaps there was nothing ever done in all past ages, and which was not a publick fact, so well attested as the resurrection of Christ. South.

TO RESUSCITATE. v. a. [resuscito, Latin.] To stir up anew; to revive.

We have beasts and birds for dissections, though divers parts, which you account vital, be perished and taken forth, resuscitating of some that seem dead in appearance. South.

RESUSCITATION. n. f. [from resuscitate.]

The act of stirring up anew; the act of reviving, or state of being revived.

Your very obliging manner of enquiring after me, at your resuscitation, should have been sooner answered, I instantly rejoice at your recovery. South.

TO RETAIL. v. a. [retailer, French.]

1. To sell in small quantities, in consequence of selling at second hand.

All encouragement should be given to artificers;

and those, who make, should also vend and retail their commodities. South.

2. To sell at second hand.

The sage dame,

By names of trade, retails each batter'd jade. South.

3. To tell in broken parts, or at second hand.

He is furnish'd with no certainties,

More than he haply may retail from me. South.

Bound with triumphant girlands will I come,

And lead thy daughter to a conqueror's bed,

To whom I will retail my conquest won,

And she shall be sole victress, Caesar's Caesar. South.

RETAIL. n. f. [from the verb.] Sale by small quantities, or at second hand.

The author, to prevent such a monopoly of sense, is resolved to deal in it himself by retail. South.

We force a wretched trade by beating down the sale,

And selling basely by retail. South.

RETAILER. n. f. [from retail.] One who sells by small quantities.

From these particulars we may guess at the rest,

as retailers do of the whole piece, by taking a view of its ends. South.

TO RETAIN. v. a. [retineo, Latin; re- ment, than the encrease of this charity. Atterbury.

2 Fortification.

To RETRIBUTE. v. a. [retribuere, Lat.]

retribuer, French] To pay back; to make repayment of.

Both the will and power to serve him are his upon so many scores, that we are unable to retribute, unless we do restore; and all the duties we can pay our Maker are lets properly requitals than restitutions. Boyle.

In the state of nature, a man comes by no arbitrary power to use a criminal, but only to retribute to him, so far as calm reason and conscience dictate, what is proportionate to his transgression. Locke.

RETRIBUTER. n. s. [from retribute]

One that makes retribution.

RETRIBUTION. n. s. [retribution, Fr. from retribute.] Repayment; return accommodated to the action.

The king thought he had not remunerated his people sufficiently with good laws, which evermore was his retribution for treasure. Bacon's Henry VII.

In good offices and due retributions, we may not be punishing and niggardly; it argues an ignoble mind, where we have wronged to huggle and dodge in the amends. Hall.

All who have their reward on earth, the fruits
Of painful superstition, and blind zeal, Nought seeking but the praise of men, here find Fit retribution, empty as their deeds. Milton.

There is no nation, though plunged into never such gross idolatry, but has some awful sense of a deity, and a persuasion of a state of retribution to men after this life. South.

It is a strong argument for a state of retribution hereafter, that in this world virtuous persons are very often unfortunate, and vicious persons prosperous. Addison's Spectator.

RETRIBUTORY. } adj. [from retribute.]

RETRIBUTIVE. } Repaying; making repayment.

In going back to school to Wittenberg,
It is most retrograde to our desire. Shakspeare.

3. In astronomy, planets are retrograde, when, by their proper motion in the zodiac, they move backward, and contrary to the succession of the signs; as from the second degree of Aries to the first: but this retrogradation is only apparent and occasioned by the observer's eye being placed on the earth; for to an eye at the sun, the planet will appear always direct, and never either stationary or retrograde. Harris.

Their wandering course, now high, now low,
then hid,

Progressive, retrograde, or standing still,
In fix thou seest. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Two geometrick figures were display'd,
One when direct, and one when retrograde. Dryden.

To RETROGRADE. v. n. [retrograder, French; retro and gradior, Latin.] To go backward.

Be ashamed: speaking again that which thou hast heard, and revealing of secrets. Ecclesi. xii. 23.

Light was the wound, the prince's care unknown,
She might not, would not yet reveal her own. Wallis.

The answer to one who asked what time was, non regas intelligi; that is, the more I think of time, the less I understand it; might persuade one, that time, which reveals all other things, is itself not to be discovered. Locke.

Thy throne is darkness in the abyss of light,
A blaze of glory that forbids the sight;
O teach me to believe thee thus conceal'd,
And search no further than thyself reveal'd. Dryden.

2. To impart from heaven.
The sufferings of this life are not to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us. Romans, viii. 18.

REVEALER. n. s. [from reveal]

1. Discoverer; one that shows or makes known.

The habit of faith in divinity is an argument of things unseen, as a stable assent unto things evident, upon authority of the divine revelation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The lives of the revealers may be justly set over against the revelation, to find whether they agree. Atterbury.

2. One that discovers to view.

He brought a taper; the reveler light
Expos'd both crime and criminal to sight. Dryden.

TO REVEIL. v. n. [Skinner derives it from reveller, French, to awake; Mr. Lye from reveelen, Dutch, to rove loosely about, which is much countenanced by the old phrase, revel rout.] To feast with loose and clamorous merriment.

My honey love,
Will we return unto thy father's house,
And revel it as bravely as the best. Shakespeare.

We'll keep no great ado—a friend or two.
Tybalt being slain so late,
It may be thought we held him carefully,
Bring out kinsman, if we revel much. Shakespeare.

Antony, that revels long o' nights,
I up. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

We shall have reveling to-night,
I will assume thy part in some disguise. Shakespeare.

He can report you more odd tales
Of our outlaw Robin Hood,
That revel'd here in Sherwood,
Though he never shot in his bow. Ben Jonson.

Were the doctrine new,
That the earth mov'd, this day would make it true;
For every part to dance and tread goes,
They tread the air, and fall not when they roste. Pompey.

When'er I revel'd in the women's bow'rs;
For first I sought her but at loose hours;
The apples she had gather'd smelt most sweet. Flour.

REVEL. n. s. [from the verb.] A feast with loose and noisy jollity.

Let them pinch th' unclean knight,
And ask him, why, that hour of fairly revel,
In their so sacred paths he dares to tread? Shakespeare.

They could do no less but, under your fair conduct,

Crave leave to view those ladies, and intreat
An hour of revels with them. Shakespeare.

TO REVEL. v. a. [revello, Latin.] To retract; to draw back.

Those, who miscarry, escape by their flood, revealing the humours from their lungs. Harvey.

But with swift wheel reverse, deep entering shar'd

Satan's right side.

Milton.

4. To contradict; to repeal.

Better it was in the eye of his understanding, that sometime an erroneous sentence definitive should prevail, till the same authority, perceiving such oversight, might afterwards correct or reverse

it, than that strifes should have respite to grow, and not come speedily unto some end.

Hooker's Preface.

A decree was made, that they had forfeited their liberties; and albeit they made great moans, yet could they not procure this sentence to be reversed.

Hayward.

Death, his doom which I
To mitigate thus plead, not to reverse,
To better life shall yield him.

He was very old, and had out-lived most of his friends, many persons of quality being dead, who had, for recompence of services, procured the re- version of his office.

Clarendon.

Upon what ground can a man promise himself a future repentance, who cannot promise himself a future life, whose life depends upon his breath, and is so retained to the present, that it cannot figure to itself the reversion of the very next minute?

South's Sermons.

So many candidates there stand for wit,

A place at court is scarce so hard to get;

11

To vain they crowd each other at the door;
For 'e'en reversions are all begg'd before. Dryden.
Fame's a reversion in which men take place,
O late reversion! at their own decease. Young.

3. Repeal; reversal.

A law may cease to be in force, without an express revocation of the lawgiver. White.
 If a grievance be inflicted on a person, he may appeal; it is not necessary to pray a revocation of such a grievance. Ayliffe.

TO REVOCUE. v. a. [revocuer, French;
revoco, Latin.]

1. To repeal; to reverse.

When we abrogate a law, as being ill made, the whole cause for which it was made still remaining, do we not herein revocue our very own deed, and upbraid ourselves with folly, yea all that were makers of it with oversight and error? Hooker.

What reason is there, but that those grants and privileges should be revoked, or reduced to the first intention? Spenser.

Without my Aurengzebe I cannot live;
Revocue his doom, or else my sentence give. Dryden.

 Tying her duty, beauty, wit, and fortunes
 To an extravagant and wheeling stranger. Shakespeare.

REVOLTED. part. [from revolte.] Having swerved from duty.

Thou sing'st ha'st maintain'd
 Against revolted multitudes the cause of truth.
Milton.

REVOLTER. n. f. [from revolte.] One who changes sides; a deserter; a renegade

Fair honour that thou dost thy God, in trusting
 He will accept thee to defend his cause,
 A murderer, a revolter, and a robber. Milton.

He was not a revolter from the truth, which he had once embraced. Asterbury's Sermons.

Those, who are negligent or revolters, shall penish. Swift.

TO REVOLVE. v. n. [revolve, Latin.]

1. To roll in a circle; to perform a revolution.

They do not revolve about any common centre.

 Such reflex revolution, day by day Repeated. Milton's Paradise Lost.

They will be taught the diurnal revolution of the heavens. Watts.

2. Space measured by some revolution.

At certain revolutions are they brought,
 And feel by turns the bitter change. Milton.

Meteors have no more time allowed them for their mounting, than the short revolution of a day.
Dryden.

The Persian wept over his army, that within the revolution of a single age, not a man would be left alive. Watts.

3. Change in the state of a government or country. It is used among us for the change produced by the admission of king William and queen Mary.
 The late revolution, justified by its necessity, and the good it had produced, will be a lasting answer.
Deane.

for the change produced by the admission of king William and queen Mary.

The late revolution, justified by its necessity, and
 the good it had produced, will be a lasting answer.
Deane.

re and vomit.] To vomit; to vomit
 again.

They might cast it up, and take more, vomiting and revomiting what they drink. Hakewill.

REVULSION. n. f. [revulsion, Fr. revulsus, Lat.] The act of revelling or drawing humours from a remote part of the body.

Derivation differs from revulsion only in the measure of the distance, and the force of the medicines used: if we draw it to some very remote or contrary part, we call it revulsion; if only to some neighbouring place, and by gentle means, we call it derivation. Wissman's of Tumours.

There is a way of revulsion to let blood in an adverse part. Bacon's Natural History.

I had heard of some strange cures of frenzies, by casual applications of fire to the lower parts, which seems reasonable enough, by the violent revulsion it may make of humours from the head. Temple.

REVULSIVE. adj. Having the power of revulsion.

His flux of blood breaking forth again with greater violence than it had done before, was not to be stopped by outward applications, nor the revulsives of any kind. Fell.

TO REWARD. v. a. [re and award, to give in return. Skinner.]

1. To give in return.

Thou hast rewarded me good, whereas I have rewarded thee evil. 1 Samuel, xxiv. 17.

They rewarded me evil for good. Psalms xxxv. 12.

2. To repay; to recompense for something good.

God rewards those that have made use of the single talent, that lowest proportion of grace, which he is pleased to give; and the method of his rewarding is by giving them more grace.
Hammond.

To judge th' unfaithful dead, but to reward
 His faithful, and receive them into bliss. Milton.

There is no more reason to reward a man for believing that four is more than three; than for being hungry or sleepy; because these things do not proceed from choice, but from natural necessity. A man must do so, nor can he do otherwise. Wilkins.

The Supreme Being rewards the just, and punishes the unjust. Brown on the Odyssey.

REWARD. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Recompense given for good performed.

Rewards and punishments do always presuppose something willingly done well or ill; without which respect, though we may sometimes receive good, yet then it is only a benefit and not a reward. Hooker.

To myself I owe this due regard;
 Not to make love my gift but my reward. Dryden.

Men have consented to the immortality of the soul and the recompenses of another world, promising to themselves some rewards of virtue after this life. Tillotson.

2. It is sometimes used with a mixture of irony, for punishment or recompense of evil.

REWARDABLE. adj. [from reward.]
 Worthy of reward.

Men's actions are judged, whether in their own nature rewardable or punishable. Hooker.

The action that is but indifferent, and without reward,

reward, if done only upon our own choice, is an act of religion, and rewardable by God, if done in obedience to our superiors. Taylor.

REWARDER. n. s. [from reward.] One that rewards; one that recompenses.

A liberal rewarder of his friends. Shakespeare.
As the Supreme Being is the only proper Judge of our perfections, so is he the only fit rewarder of them.

If judges, as well as rewarders, have popular assemblies seen, of those who best deserved from them. Swift.

TO REWARD. v. a. [re and word.] To repeat in the same words.

Bring me to the rest,
And I the matter will reward; which madness
Would gambol from. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

RHABARBARATE. adj. [from rhubarbarq, Lat.] Impregnated or tinged with rhubarb.

The salt humours must be evacuated by the fennate, rhubarbarate and sweet manna purgers, with acids added, or the purging waters. Feyer.

RHABDOMANCY. n. s. [ῥαβδομανία and μάντις.] Divination by a wand.

Of peculiar rhodomancy is that which is used in mineral discoveries, with a forked hazel, commonly called Moses's rod, which, freely held forth, will stir and play if any mine be under it.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

RHAPSODIST. n. s. [from rhapsody.] One who writes without regular dependance of one part upon another.

Ask our rhapsodist, if you have nothing but the excellence and loveliness of virtue to preach, and no future rewards or punishments, how many vicious wretches will you ever reclaim? Watts.

RHAPSODY. n. s. [ῥαψῳδία; ῥάψω, to sew, and ὁδὸς, a song.] Any number of parts joined together, without necessary dependance or natural connection.

Such a deed, as sweet religion makes
A rhapsody of words. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

This confusion and rhapsody of difficulties was not to be supposed in each single sinner. Hammond.
He, that makes no reflexions on what he reads, only loads his mind with a rhapsody of tales fit for the entertainment of others.

The words slide over the ears, and vanish like a rhapsody of evening tales. Watts on the Mind.

RHEIN-BERAY. n. s. [Spina cervina, Lat.] Buckthorn, a plant.

RHETORICK. n. s. [ῥητορικὴ; rhētorikē, French.]

1. The art of speaking not merely with propriety, but with art and elegance.

We could not allow him an orator, who had the best thoughts, and who knew all the rules of rhētorikē; if he had not acquired the art of using them. Dryden's Duffresnoy.

Of the passions, and how they are moved, Aristotle, in his second book of rhētorikē, hath admirably discoursed in a true compass. Locke.

Grammar teacheth us to speak properly, rhētorikē instructs to speak elegantly. Baker.

2. The power of persuasion; oratory.

The heart's still rhētorikē, disclos'd with eyes. Shakespeare.

His sober lips then did he softly part,
Whence of pure rhētorikē whole streams outflow. Farfax.

Enjoy your dear wit and gay rhētorikē,
That hath so well been taught her dazzling fence. Milton.

RHETORICAL. adj. [rhētoricus, Latin; from rhētorikē.] Pertaining to rhētorikē; oratorical; figurative.

The apprehension is so deeply rivetted into my mind, that rhētorical flourishes cannot at all loosen it. Mare.

Because Brutus and Cassius met a blackmore, and Pompey had on a dark garment at Pharsalia, these were pretexts of their overthrow, which notwithstanding are scarce rhētorical feigns; concluding metaphors from realities, and from conceptions metaphorical inferring realities again. Brown.

The subject may be moral, logical, or rhētorical, which does not come under our senses. Watts.

RHETORICALLY. adv. [from rhētorical.] Like an orator; figuratively; with intent to move the passions.

TO RHETORICATE. v. n. [rhētorikōs, low Latin; from rhētorikē.] To play the orator; to attack the passions.

'Twill be much more reasonable to reform, than apologize or rhētoricate; not to suffer themselves to perish in the midst of such solicitations to be saved. Decay of Piety.

RHETORICIAN. n. s. [rhētorician, Fr. rhētor, Latin.]

1. One who teaches the science of rhētorick.

The ancient sophists and rhētoricians, which ever had young auditors, lived till they were an hundred years old. Bacon.

'Tis the business of rhētoricians to treat the characters of the passions. Dryden's Duffresnoy.
A man may be a very good rhētorician, and yet at the same time a mean orator. Baker on Learning.

2. An orator. Let's proper.

He play'd at Lions a declaiming prize,
At which the vanquish'd rhētorician dies. Dryden.

RHETORICIAN. adj. Suited a master of rhētorick.

Boldly presum'd with rhētorician pride,
To hold of any question either side. Blackmore.

RHEUM. n. s. [ῥεύμα; rhēuma, French.] A thin watery matter oozing through the glands, chiefly about the mouth.

Quincy.

Trust not these cunning waters of his eyes;
For villany is not without such a rhēum;
And he, long traded in it, makes it seem Like rivers of remorse. Shakespeare.

You did void your rhēum upon my beard. Shakespeare.

Each changing season does its poison bring,
Rheums chill the winter, agues blast the spring. Prior.

RHEUMATICK. adj. [ῥευματικὸς; from rhēum.] Proceeding from rhēum or a peccant watery humour.

The moon, the governess of floods,
Pole in her anger, wastes all the air,
That *rhēum*at diseases do abound. Shakespeare.

The blood taken away looked very dry or *rhēum*at. Feyer.

RHEUMATISM. n. s. [ῥευματισμός; rhēumatismus, French; rhēumatismus, Latin.] A painful distemper supposed to proceed from acrid humours.

Rheumatism is a distemper affecting chiefly the membrana communis musculosorum, which it makes rigid and unfit for motion; and it seems to be occasioned almost by the same cause, as the mutilaginous glands in the joints are rendered stiff and gritty in the gout. Quincy.

The throbbing quinsy, 'tis my dear complaint,
And rhēumatism I send to rack the joints. Dryden.

RHEUMY. adj. [from rhēum.] Full of sharp moisture.

Is Brutus sick?
And will he steal out of his wholesome bed,
To dare the vile contagion of the night?
And tempt the rhēumy and unwholesome air,
To add unto his sickness? Shakespeare.

The South he lov'd, and with light and happy brings,
'And fogs are shaken from his happy tongue.

From his divided beard two streams he pours
His head and heavy eyes still in show'rs. Dryden.
RHINOCEROS. n. s. [ῥίνο and ῥίνο, French.] A vast beast in the East Indies armed with a horn on his nose.

Approach thou like the rugged Russian bear;
The arm'd rhinoceros, or Myrcanian tiger;
Take any shape but that, and my firm nerves Shall never tremble. Shakespeare's Merchant.

If you draw your beast in an emblem, show a landscape of the country natural to the beast; as to the rhinoceros an East Indian landscape, the crocodile, an Egyptian. Frederick.

RHOMB. n. s. [rhombe, Fr. rhombus, Lat. ῥόμβος.] In geometry, a parallelogram or quadrangular figure, having its four sides equal, and consisting of parallel lines, with two opposite angles acute, and two obtuse: it is formed by two equal and right cones joined together at their base. Trevoux and Harris.

Save the sun his labour, and that swift Nocturnal and diurnal rhomb suppos'd
Invisible also above all stars, the wheel
Of day and night. Milton.

See how in warlike muster they appear,
In rhombs and wedges, and half moons and wings. Milton.

RHOMBICK. adj. [from rhomb.] Shaped like a rhomb.

Many other sorts of stones are regularly figured; the asteria in form of a star, and they are of a rhombick figure. Grew.

RHOMBOID. n. s. [ῥόμβοειδής; rhomboides, French.] A figure approaching to a rhomb.

Many other sorts of stones are regularly figured; and they are of a rhomboidick figure; talk, of such as are rhomboid. Grew.

RHOMBODAL. adj. [from rhomboid.] Approaching in shape to a rhomb.

Another rhombodal selenites of a compressed form; had many others mixed round the middle of it. Woodward.

RHUBARB. n. s. [rhubarbara, Latin.]

A medicinal root slightly purgative, referred by botanists to the dock.

What rhubarb, fenna, or what purgative drug Would scour these English-bence? Shakespeare.
Having fired the sentinal, I purged him with an infusion of rhubarb in small ale. Wise.

RHYME. n. s. [ῥυθμός; rhythme, French.]

1. A harmonical succession of sounds.

The youth with songs and rhymes;
Some dance, some hale the rope. Danham.

2. The consonance of verses; the correspondence of the last sound of one verse to the last sound or syllable of another.

For rhyme the rudder is of verses,
With which like ships they steer their courses. Hudibras.

Such was the news, indeed, but songs and rhymes
Purvey as much in these hard iron times;
As would a plough of trembling fowl, that life Against an eagle flogging from the skies. Dryden.

If Cupid throws a single dart,
We make him wound the lover's heart;
But if he takes his bow and quiver,
'Tis sure he must transfix the liver;
For rhyme with reason may dispense,
And sound has right to govern sense. Prior.

3. Poetry; a poem.

All his manly power it did disperse,
As he were warmed with inebriated rhyme,
That oftentimes he quack'd. Fair Play.
Who would not sing like Lycidas? he knew Himself to sing, and so the rhyme rhyme. Milton.

RIB

Now sportive youth
Cant inordinate rhythms with suiting notes,
And puer inharmonious. Philips.
4. A word of sound to answer to another word.

What wise means to gain it hast thou chose?
Knew, fame and fortune both are made of prose.
Is thy ambition sweetening for a rhyme,
Thou unambitious fool, at this late time? Young.

RHYME OR REASON. Number or sense.

I was promis'd on a time,
To have reason for my rhyme;
But from that time unto this season,
I had neither rhyme nor reason. Spenser.

The guilefulness of my mind drove the grossness of the lappery into a received belief, in despite of the teeth of all rhyme and reason, that they were fancies. Shakespeare.

TO RHYME. v. n.

1. To agree in sound.
He was too warm on picking work to dwell,
But sagotured his notions as they fell,
And, if they rhim'd and rattled, all was well. Dry.

2. To make verses.
These fellows of infinite tongue, that can rhyme themselves into ladies favours, they do always reason themselves out again. Shakespeare.
Their march'd the bard and blockhead, side by side,
Who rlym'd for hire, and patroniz'd for pride. Pope.

RHYMER. n. f. [from rhyme.] One RHYMSTER. n. f. who makes rhymes; a versifier; a poet in contempt.
Scall'd rhimers will ballad us out o' tune. Shak.
It was made penal to the English, to permit the Irish to graze upon their lands, to entertain any of their minstrels, rhimers, or news-tellers. Davies on Ireland.

Rhymer come on, and do the worst you can;
I fear not you, nor yet a better man. Dryden.
Milton's rhyme is constrained at an age, when the passion of love makes every man a rhimer, though not a poet. Dryden.
I speak of those who are only rhimers. Dennis.

RHYTHMICAL. adj. [from rhythm; rythmique, French; from rhyme or rhythm.]
Harmonical; having one sound proportioned to another.

RIB. n. f. [ribbe, Saxon.]

1. A bone in the body.
Of these there are twenty-four in number, viz:
twelve on each side the twelve vertebrae of the back, they are segments of a circle, they grow flat and broad, as they approach the sternum;
but the nearer they are to the vertebrae, the rounder and thicker they are; at which end they have a round head, which, being covered with a cartilage, is received into the sinus in the bodies of the vertebrae: the ribs, thus articulated, make an acute angle with the lower vertebrae. the ribs have each a small canal or sinus, which runs along their under sides, in which lie a nerve, vein, and artery;
their extremities which are fastened to the sternum, are cartilaginous, and the cartilages make an obtuse angle with the bony part of the ribs, this angle respects the head: the cartilages are harder in women than in men, that they may better bear the weight of their breasts. the ribs are of two sorts;
the seven upper are called true ribs, because their cartilaginous ends are received into the sinus of the sternum; the five lower are called false ribs, because they are shorter and flatter, of which only the first is joined to the extremity of the sternum, the car-tilaginous extremities of the rest being tied to one another, and thereby leaving a greater space for the distention of the stomach and intestines. the last of these short ribs is shorter than all the rest, it is not tied to them, but sometimes to the musculus obliquus descendens. Quincy.

Why do I yield to that suggestion,
Whose horrid image doth unfix my hair,

And make my seated heart knock at my ribs,
Against the use of nature? Shakespeare's Macbeth.

He open'd my left side, and took
From thence a rib, with cordial spirits warm
And life blood steaming fresh. Milton.
Such he, who first the passage try'd,
In harden'd oak his heart did hide,
And ribs of iron arm'd his side. Dryden.

2. Any piece of timber or other matter which strengthens the side.
I should not fix the sandy hour glass run,
But I should think of shallows and of flats;
And see my wealthy Andrew dock'd in sand,
Vailing her high top lower than her ribs,
To kiss her burial. Shakespeare.

The ships with shatter'd ribs scarce creeping from the seas. Drayton.

3. Any prominence running in lines: as the stalks of a leaf.

RIBALD. n. f. [ribauld, French; ribalde, Italian.] A loose, tough, mean, brutal wretch.
That lewd ribbald, with vile lust advanced,
Laid first his filthy hands on virgin clean,
To spoil her dainty corse so fair and sheen. Spenser.
Your ribbald nag of Egypt,
The breeze upon her, like a cow in June,
Hoits salts, and flies. Shakespeare.

The busy day,
Wak'd by the laike, has rous'd the ribald crows,
And a eaming night will hide our joys no longer. Shakespeare.
Ne'er one sprig of laurel grac'd these ribbalds,
From flashing Bentley down to piddling Tibbalds. Pope.

RIBALDRY. n. f. [from ribald; ribaudie, old French.] Mean, lewd, brutal language.
Mr. Cowley asserts, that obscenity has no place in wit; Buckingham says, 'tis an ill sort of wit, which has nothing more to support it than barefaced ribaldry. Dryden.
The ribaldry of the low characters is disferent; the reeve, miller, and cook are distinguished from each other. Dryden.
In the same antique loom these scenes were wrought
Embellish'd with good morals and just thought,
True nature in her noblest light you see,
Ere yet she was by modern gallantry
To tinsel, jills and fulsom ribaldry. Granville.

If the outward profession or religion were once in practise among men in office, the clergy would see their duty and interest in qualifying themselves for lay-conversation, when once they were out of fear of being choaked by ribaldry or prophaneness. Swift.

RIBAND. n. f. [rubands, ruban, French]
This word is sometimes written ribon.
A filer of silk; a narrow web of silk,
which is worn for ornament.
Quaint in green, she shall be loose enrob'd,
With ribbands pendent, flaring 'bout her head. Shakespeare.
A ribband did the braided tresses bind,
The tress was loose. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
See! in the lists they wait the trumpet's sound;
Some love device is wrought on ev'ry sword,
And ev'ry ribband bears some mystick word. Granville.

RIBBED. adj. [from rib.]

1. Furnished with ribs.
Was I by rocks engender'd; rib'd with steel?
Such tortures to resist, or not to feel?
Hung on each bough a single leaf appears,
Which shrivell'd in its infancy remains,
Like a clow'd fan, nor stretches wide its veins,
But as the seasons in their circle run,
Opens its ribb'd surface to the nearer sun. Gay.

2. Inclosed as the body by ribs.
Remember
The nat'ral bravery of your life, which stands

RIB

As Neptune's park, ribb'd and paled in
With rocks unscalable, and roaring waters. Shakespeare.

3. Marked with protuberant lines.
RIBBON. n. f. See RIBAND.

TO RIBBOST. v. n. [rib and roast] To beast soundly. A burlesque word.
That done, he rises, humbly bows,
And gives thanks for the princely blows;
Departs not meanly proud, and boasting
Of his magnificent rib-roasting. Butler.
I have been pinched in flesh, and well rib-roasted under my former masters! but I'm in now for skin and all. Laetfrange.

RIBWORT. n. f. [plantago.] A plant.

RIC. n. f. Ric denotes a powerful, rich, or valiant man: as in these verses of Fortunatus:
*Hilperige potens, si interpret barbarus adfit,
Adjutor fortis hoc quoque nomen habet.*
Hil'pric Barbarians a stout helper term.
So Afric is altogether strong; Æthelric, nobly strong or powerful: to the same sense as Polycrates, Crato, Plutarchus, Opimius. Gibson's Camden.

RICE. n. f. [oryza, Latin.] One of the esculent grains: it hath its grains disposed into a panicle, which are almost of an oval figure, and are covered with a thick husk, somewhat like barley: this grain is cultivated in most of the Eastern countries. Miller.
Rice is the food of two thirds of mankind; it is kindly to human constitutions, proper for the consumptive, and those subject to hemorrhages. Abusnot.

If the snuff get out of the snuffers, it may fall into a dish of rice milk. Swift.

RICH. adj. [riche, French; ricco, Italian; rica, Sax.]

1. Wealthy; abounding in wealth;
abounding in money or possessions;
opulent: opposed to poor.
I am as rich in having such a jewel,
As twenty seas, if all their sand were pearl. Shakespeare.

The rich shall not give more, and the poor no less. Exodus.
A chief bent to unhoard the cash
Of some rich burgher. Milton.
Rich was his soul, though his attire was poor,
As heav'n had cloath'd his own ambassador. Dryden.

Several nations of the Americans are rich in land, and poor in all the comforts of life. Locke.
He may look upon the rich as benefactors, who have beautified the prospect all around him. Scot.

2. Valuable; estimable; precious; splendid; sumptuous.
Earth, in her rich attire,
Consummate lovely wild. Milton.
Matilda never was meanly dress'd in her life, and nothing pleases her in dress, but that which is very rich and beautiful to the eye. Larue.

3. Having any ingredients or qualities in a great quantity or degree.
So we th' Arabian coast do know
At distance, when the spices blow,
By the rich odour laugh to steer,
Though neither day nor star appear.
If life be short, it shall be glorious,
Each minute shall be rich in some great action. Rowe.

Sauces and rich spices are fetched from India. Baker.

4. Fertile; fruitful.
There are, who, fondly studious of increase,
Rich foreign mold on their ill-natur'd land Induce. Philips.

5. Abundant; plentiful.
The gorgeous East with richest hand
Pours on her sons barbaric pearl and gold. Milton.
6. Abounding; plentifully stocked: as, pastures rich in flocks.

7. Having something precious.
Grove, whose rich trees wept odorous gums and balm. Milton.

RICHED. adj. [from rich] Enriched. Obsolete.

Of all these bounds,
With shadowy forests, and with champains rich'd,
With plenteous rivers and wide skirted meads,
We make thee lady. Shakespeare's King Lear.

RICHES. n. f. [richesses, French.]

1. Wealth; money or possessions.
The instrumentalness of riches to charity has rendered it necessary by laws to secure property. Hammond.

Chemists seek riches by transmutation and the great elixir. Spratt.

Riches do not consist in having more gold and silver, but in having more in proportion than our neighbours, whereby we are enabled to procure to ourselves a greater plenty of the conveniences of life, than comes within their reach, who, sharing the gold and silver of the world in a less proportion, want the means of plenty and power, and so are poorer. Locke.

What riches give us, let us first enquire,
Meat, fire, and cloaths, what more? meat, cloaths and fire. Pope.

2. Splendid sumptuous appearance.
The riches of heav'n's pavement, trodden gold. Milton.

RICHLY. adv. [from rich.]

1. With riches; wealthily; splendidly; magnificently.
In Belmont is a lady richly left,
And she is fair, of wondrous virtues. Shakespeare.
Women richly gay in gems. Milton.

2. Plenteously; abundantly.
In animals, some smells are found more richly than in plants. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
After a man has studied the laws of England, the reading the reports of adjudged cases will richly improve him. Watson.

3. Truly; abundantly. An ironical use.
There is such licentiousness among the basest of the people, that one would not be sorry to see them bestowing upon one another a chastisement which they so richly deserve. Addison.

RICHNESS. n. f. [from rich.]

1. Opulence; wealth.
Of virtue you have left proof to the world;
And virtue is grateful with beauty and richness adorn'd. Sidney.

2. Finery; splendour.

3. Fertility; fecundity; fruitfulness.
This town is famous for the richness of the soil. Addison.

4. Abundance or perfection of any quality.
I amused myself with the richness and variety of colours in the western parts of heaven. Spektator.

5. Pampering qualities.
The lively tincture of whose gushing blood
Shou'd clearly prove the richness of his food. Dryden.

RICK. n. f. See REEK.

1. A pile of corn or hay regularly heaped up in the open field, and sheltered from wet.
An inundation
O'erflowed a farmer's barn and stable;
Whole ricks of hay and stacks of corn
Were down the sudden current born. Swift.
Mice and rats do great injuries in the field, houses, barns, and corn ricks. Mortimer's Husbandry.

RID

2. A heap of corn or hay piled by the gatherer.
In the North they bind them up in small bundles, and make small ricks of them in the field. Mortimer's Husbandry.

RICKETS. n. f. [rachitis, Latin. A name given to the distemper at its first appearance by Glisson.]

The rickets is a distemper in children, from an unequal distribution of nourishment, whereby the joints grow knotty, and the limbs uneven: its cure is performed by evacuation and friction. Quincy.

In some years, liver-grown, spleen, and rickets are put altogether, by reason of their likeness. Graum's Bills of Mortality.

O were my pupil fairly knock'd o' th' head,
I should possess th' estate, if he were dead;
He's so far gone with the rickets and th' evil,
That one small dose will send him to the devil. Dryden.

So when at school we first declaim,
Old Busby walks us in a theme,
Whose props support our infant vein,
And help the rickets in the brain;
But when our souls their force dilate,
Our thoughts grow up to wit's estate. Prior.

RICKETY. adj. [from rickets.] Diseased with the rickets.
In a young animal, when the solids are too lax, the case of rickety children, the diet should be gently astringent. Arbutnot.

RICTURE. n. f. [ricura, Latin.] A gaping. DiG.

RID. pret. of ride.

To RID. v. a. [from ryeðban, Saxon. In the pret. perhaps ridden or rid; in the passive participle rid.]

1. To set free; to redeem.
It is he that delivereth me from my cruel enemies; thou shalt rid me from the wicked man. Psalms xviii. 49.
Rid me, and deliver me out of great waters. Psalms cxliv.

I will bring you out from under their burthens, and rid you out of their bondage. Exodus, vi. 6.

2. To clear; to disencumber.
They were not before so willing to be rid of their learned pastor, as now importunate to obtain him again from them, who had given him entertainment. Hooker.

I must rid all the fear of pirates. Shakespeare.
We'll use his countenance; which being done,
Let her, who would be rid of him, devise His speedy taking off. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Upon the word, sent forth
Three of thy crew, to rid thee of that care. Ben Jonson.

I can put on Thy terrors, as I put thy mildness on,
Image of thee in all things; and shall soon,
Arm'd with thy might, rid heav'n of these rebels. Milton.

Did faints for this bring in their plate;
For when they thought the cause had need on't,
Happy was he that could be rid on't. Hudibras.

The god uneasy till he slept again,
Resolv'd at once to rid himself of pain. Dryden.

The greater visible good does not always raise men's desire, in proportion to the greatness it appears to have; though every little trouble moves us, and sets us on work to get rid of it. Locke.

The ladies asked, whether we believed that the men of any town would, at the same conjuncture, have loaded themselves with their wives; or rather, whether they would not have been glad of such an opportunity to get rid of them? Addison.

3. To dispatch.
Having the best at Rid Barnet field;
We'll thither straight; for with us, rid away. Shakespeare.

RID

4. To drive away; to remove by violence; to destroy.
Ah dearth! thou have rid this sweet young prince. Shakespeare.

RIDDANCE. n. f. [from rid.]

1. Deliverance.
Deliverance from sudden death, riddance from all adversity, and the extent of having mercy towards all men. Hooker.

2. Disencumbrance; loss of something one is glad to lose.
I have too griev'd a heart
To take a tedious leave: thus losers part.
—A gentle riddance. Shakespeare.
By this, the cock had a good riddance of his rival. L'Esperance.

3. Act of clearing away any encumbrances.
Those blossoms, and those drooping gums,
That lie bestrown, unsightly and unsmooth,
Ask riddance, if we mean to tread with ease. Milton.

RIDDEN. the participle of ride.
He could never have ridden out an eternal period, but it must be by a more powerful being than himself. Hale.

RIDDLE. n. f. [rxæðel, Saxon; from rxæbe, counsel, perhaps a trial of wit.]

1. An enigma; a puzzling question; a dark problem.
How did you dare
To trade and traffick with Macbeth,
In riddles and in charms of death? Shakespeare.
The Theban monster, that propos'd
Her riddle, and him, who solv'd it not, devour'd;
That once found out and solv'd, for grief and fright
Cast herself headlong from the Ithacian steep. Milton.

2. Any thing puzzling.
'Twas a strange riddle of a lady;
Not love, if any lov'd her: hey day!
So cowards never use their might,
But against such as will not fight. Hudibras.

3. [Rubble, Saxon.] A coarse or open sieve.
Horse beans and tares, sown together, are easily parted with a riddle. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To RIDDLE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To solve; to unriddle. There is something of whimsical analogy between the two senses of the word riddle; as, we say, to sift a question: but their derivations differ.
Riddle me this, and guess him if you can,
Who bears a nation in a single man? Dryden.

2. To separate by a coarse sieve.
The finest sifted mould must be riddled in. Mortimer.

To RIDOLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To speak ambiguously or obscurely.
Be plain, good son, and homely in thy drift;
Riddling confession finds but riddling shrift. Shakespeare.

RIDDLINGLY. adv. [from riddle.] In the manner of a riddle; secretly.
Though like the pestilence and old-fashion'd love,
Riddlingly it catch men, and doth remove Never, till it be starv'd out, yet their state Is poor. Dorne.

To RIDE. v. n. preter. rid or rode; patt. rid or ridden. [riban, Saxon; rijder, Dutch.]

1. To travel on horseback.
Brutus and Cassius
Are rid, like madmen, through the gates of Rome. Shakespeare.
Were you but riding forth to air yourself,
Such parting were too pretty. Shakespeare.

Am not I thine id, upon which thou hast rid.
Numbers.
 Through scorps of smoke and adverse fire he ides.

While every that is levell'd at his sides. Smith.
 Let your master ride on before, and do you gallop after him. Swift's Directions to the Graces.

2. To travel in a vehicle; to be borne,
 not to walk.

Infected be the air whereon they ride. Shakespeare.
 Upon this chaos rid the distressed ark, that bore
 the small remains of mankind. Barnet.

3. To be supported in motion.

As venerable Neher, hatch'd in silver,
 Should with a bond of air, strong as the axle-tree
 On which heav'n rides, knit all the Grecian ears
 To his experienc'd tongue. Shakespeare.

4. To manage an horse.

Skill to ride seems a science
 Proper to gentle blood; some others feign,
 To manage horses, as did this vaunter; but in vain.
Spenser.

The horses I saw well chosen; ridden, and furnished. Shakespeare.

Inspir'd by love, whose business is to please,
 He rode, he fenc'd, he mov'd with graceful ease.
Dryden.

5. To be on the water.

On the western coast
Rideth a puissant army. Shakespeare.

The sea was grown so rough, that the admiral was not able longer to ride it out with his galleys; but was enforced to slip his anchors, and run his galleys on ground. Kneller.

They were then in a place to be aided by their ships, which rode near in Edinburgh Frith.
Hayward.

Waiting him his royal fleet did ride,
 And willing winds to their low'd sails deny'd.
Dryden.

Men once walk'd where ships at anchor ride.
Dryden.

Now on their coasts our conquering navy rides,
 Way lays their merchant, and their land besets.
Dryden.

6. To be supported by something subservient.

A credulous father, and a brother noble,
 Whose nature is so far from doing harms,
 That he suspects none; on whose foolish honesty
 My practices ride easily. Shakespeare's King Lear.

To RIDE. v. a.

1. To sit on so as to be carried.

They ride the air in whirlwind. Milton.

2. To manage insolently at will.

Humility does not make us servile or insensible, nor oblige us to be ridden at the pleasure of every casual. Collier.

The nobility could no longer endure to be ridden
 by bakers, coddens, and brewers. Swift.

RIDER. n. f. [from ride.]

1. One who is carried on a horse or in a vehicle.

The strong camel and the gen'rous horse,
 Retrain'd and aw'd by man's inferior force,
 Do to the rider's will their rage submit,
 And answer to the spur, and own the bit. Prior.

2. One who manages or breaks horses.

His horses are bred better; and to that end riders
 dearly hired. Shakespeare's As you like it.

I would with lockies from Newmarket come,
 And to rough riders give my choicest wine.
Brayton.

3. An infested leaf.

RIDGE. n. f. [Drugg, Saxon; rig, Danish; rugge, Dutch, the back.]

1. The top of the back.

He thought it was no time to stay;
 But as a trice advanced the knight
 Upon the bare ridge not upright. Hudibras.

2. The rough top of any thing, resembling the top of the back.

As when a vulture on Icarus brood,
 Whose snowy ridge the roving Tartar bounds,
 Dilleges from a region scarce of prey.
 His sons
 Shall dwell to Selt, on this long ridge of hills!
Milton.

The highest ridges of those mountains serve for the maintenance of cattle for the inhabitants of the vallies. Ray.

3. A keep protuberance.

Past rise in crystal wall, or ridge direct.
 For haste. Milton.

About her coasts unruly waters roar,
 And, rising on a ridge, insult the shore. Dryden.

4. The ground thrown up by the plow.

Thou visitest the earth; thou waterst the ridges thereof abundantly; thou fettest the furrows thereof. Psalms lxx. 10.

The body is smooth on that end, and on this 'tis set with ridges round the point. Woodward.

Wheat must be sowed above farrow fourteen days before Michaelmas, and laid up in round high warm ridges. Mortimer.

5. The top of the roof rising to an acute angle.

Ridge tiles or roof tiles, being in length thirteen inches, and made circular breadths like an half cylinder, whose diameter is about ten inches or more, and about half an inch and half a quarter in thickness, are laid upon the upper part or ridges of the roof, and also on the hips. Mason.

6. Ridges of a horse's mouth are wrinkles or risings of the flesh in the roof of the mouth, running across from one side of the jaw to the other like fleshy ridges, with interjacent furrows or sucking cavities. Farrier's Dict.

To RIDGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To form a ridge.

Thou from heav'n
 Feign'dst at thy birth was given thee in thy hair,
 Where strength can least abide, though all thy hairs
 Were bristles rang'd like those that ridge the back.
 Of chaf'd wild boars, or rust'd porcupines. Milton.

RIDGLING. n. f. [from ridula, Latin.]
RIDGIL. n. f. [from ridula, Latin.] A ram half castrated.

Tend my herd, and see them fed;
 To mowing ridgins, evening waters led:
 And watch the Libyan ridgins bawling head.
Dryden.

And ware the ridgling with his butting head.
Dryden.

RIDG. adj. [from ridge.] Rising in a ridge.

Far in the sea against the foaming shore,
 There stands a rock, the raging billows roar
 Above his head in storms; but when 'tis clear, Uncurl their ridgy backs, and at his feet appear.
Dryden.

RIDICULE. n. f. [ridicule, French; ri- diculum, Lat.] Wit of that species that provokes laughter.

Sacred to ridicule his whole life long,
 And the sad burden of some merry song. Pope.

Those, who aim at ridicule,
 Should fix upon some certain rule,
 Which fairly hints they are in jest. Swift.

To RIDICULE. v. a. [from the noun.]
 To expose to laughter; to treat with contemptuous merriment.

I with the vein of ridiculing all that is serious and good may have no worse effect upon our state, than knight errantry had on theirs. Temple.

He often took a pleasure to appear ignorant, that he might the better turn to ridicule those that valued themselves on their books. Milton.

RIDICULOUS. n. f. One that ridicules.
 The ridiculous shall make only himself ridiculous.
East of Chesham.

RIDICULOUS. adj. [ridiculus, French;
ridiculus, Lat.] Worthy of laughter;
 exciting contemptuous merriment.

Thus was the building left
Ridiculous; and the work confusion nam'd. Milton.

It was not in Titus's power not to be decided;
 but it was in his power not to be ridiculous. South.

RIDICULOUSLY. adv. [from ridiculous.]
 In a manner worthy of laughter or contempt.

Epicurus's discourse concerning the original of the world is so ridiculously merry, that the design of his philosophy was pleasure and not instruction.
South.

RIDICULOUSNESS. n. f. [from ridicu- lous.] The quality of being ridiculous.

What sport do Tertullian, Minucius and Ar-nobius make with the images consecrated to divine worship? from the meanness of the matter they are made, the casualties of fire, and rottenness they are subject to, on purpose to represent the ridicu- lousness of worshipping such things. Stillingfleet.

RIDING. particip. adj. Employed to travel on any occasion.

It is provided by another provincial constitution, that no suffragan bishop shall have more than one riding apparitor, and that archdeacons shall not have so much as one riding apparitor, but only a foot messenger. Ashe's Paragon.

RIDING. n. f. [from ride.]

1. A district visited by an officer.

2. One of the divisions of Yorkshire, answering to hundreds in other counties:
 corrupted from tribing.

 served both for a tunic and a coat. Arbutnot.

Good housewives all the winter's rage despise,
 Defended by the ridinghood's disguise. Gay.

RIZ. n. f. An esculent grain. This differs from wheat in having a flatter spike, the corn larger and more naked.
Miller.

August shall bear the form of a young man of a fierce aspect, upon his head a garland of wheat and riz. Peasam.

RIFE. adj. [ryfe, Saxon; rijf, Dutch.] Prevalent; prevailing; abounding. It is now only used of epidemical distempers.

While those restless desires, in great men rise,
 To visit so low folks did much disdain,
 This while, though poor, they in themselves did reign. Sidney.

Quyon closely did await Advantage; whilst his foe did rage most rise; Sometimes adroit, sometimes he strook him straight,
 And fustled off his blows. Spenser.

The plague was then rise in Hungary. Kneller.

Blissings then are plentiful and rise,
 More plentiful than hopes. Herbert.

Space may produce new worlds; whereof so rise
 There went a fame in heav'n, that he ere long Intended to create. Milton's Paradise Lost.

This is the place,
 Whence at a now the tumult of loud mirth
 Was rise, and perfect in my list'ning ear. Milton.

That grounded maxim
 So rise and celebrated in the mouths
 Of wiser men, that to the publick good Private respects must yield. Milton.

TO RIFLE. v. a. [rifler, rifler, French; rifflen, Dutch.]

1. To rob; to pillage; to plunder.
 Stand, Sir, and throw us what you have about you; if not, we'll make you, Sir, and rifle you. Shakespeare.

Men, by his suggestion taught,
 Ransack'd the centre, and with impious hands
 Rifled the bowels of their mother earth
 For treasures better hid. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 You have rifed my master; who shall maintain me? L'Estrange.

A commander in the parliament's rebel army rifled and defaced the cathedral at Litchfield. South.

2. To take away; to seize as pillage.
 Mine is thy daughter, priest, and shall remain,
 And prayers, and tears, and bribes shall plead in vain,
 Till time shall rifle every youthful grace. Pope.

RIFLER. n. f. [from rifle.] Robber; plunderer; pillager.

RIFT. n. f. [from ripte.] A cleft; a breach; an opening.

He pluckt a bough, out of whose rift there come Small drops of gory blood. Spenser.
 She did confine thee

Into a cloven pine, within which rift
 Impison'd, thou didst painfully remain. Shakespeare.
 In St. James's fields is a conduit of brick, unto which joineeth a low vault, at the end of that is a round house, with a small slit or rift; and in the conduit a window: if you cry out in the rift, it makes a fearful roaring at the window. Bacon.

They have an idle tradition, that a missel bird, feeding upon a seed she cannot digest, expelleth it whole; which, falling upon a bough of a tree that hath some rift, spurteth forth the missile too. Bur.

Either tropick
 'Gan thunder, and both ends of heav'n; the clouds
 From many a horrid rift abortive pour'd
 Fierce rain, with lightning mixt. Milton.

Some pick out bullets from the vessels sides,
 Some drive old oakum through each seam and rift. Dryden.

TO RIFT. v. a. [from the noun.] To cleave; to split. To rive is perhaps more proper.

To the dread rattling thunder
 Have I giv'n fire, and rifed Jove's stout oak With his own bolt. Shakespeare's Tempest.

At fight of him the people with a shout
 Rifed the air. Milton's Agonistes.
 On rifed rocks, the dragon's late abodes,
 The green reed trembles. Pope's Messiah.

TO RIFT. v. n.

1. To burst; to open.
 I'd shriek, that even your ears
 Should rift to hear me. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
 Some trees are best for ship-timber, as oaks that grow in moist grounds; for that maketh the timber tough, and not apt to rift with ordnance. Bacon's Natural History.

When ice is congealed in a cup, it will swell instead of contracting, and sometimes rift. Bacon's Natural History.

2. [Rover, Danish.] To belch; to break wind.

RIG. n. f. Rig, ridge, seem to signify the top of a hill falling on each side; Voss II.

RIGHT. n. f.

1. Not wrong.

One rising, eminent
In wise report, spake much of right and wrong,
Of justice, of religion, truth, and peace,
And judgment from above. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Justice; not injury.

Persons of noble blood are less envied in their rising, for it seemeth but right done to their birth.

In the midst of your invectives, do the Turks this right, as to remember that they are no idolaters.

Long love to her has borne the faithful knight,
And well deserv'd, had fortune done him right.

He, that would do right to religion, cannot take a more eth'etical course, than by reconciling it with the happiness of mankind.

3. Freedom from guilt; goodness.

His faith perhaps in some nice tenets might Be wrong, his life I'm sure was in the right.

4. Freedom from error.

Seldom your opinions err;
Your eyes are always in the right.

5. Just claim.

The Roman citizens were, by the sword, taught to acknowledge the pope their lord, though they knew not by what right.

The proud tyrant would many times say, that whatsoever belonged unto the empire of Rome, was of right his, for as much as he was possessed of the imperial scepter, which his great grandfather
Mahomet had by law of arms won from Constantine.

Subdue by force, all who refuse
Right reason for their law; and for their king Messiah, who by right of merit reigns.

My right to it appears,
By long possession of eight hundred years.
Might and right are inseparable in the opinion of the world.

Descriptions, figures, and fables must be in all heroick poems; every poet hath as much right to them, as every man hath to air.

Judah pronounced sentence of death against Thamar: our author thinks it is very good proof, that because he did it, therefore he had a right to do it.

Agrippa is generally ranged in sets of medals among the emperors; as some among the empresses have no other right.

6. That which justly belongs to one.

To thee doth the right of her appertain, seeing thou only art of her kindred.

The custom of employing such great persons in all great offices, passes for a right.

The privy had himself by nature's laws,
Born free, he fought his right.

7. Property; interest.

A subject in his prince may claim a right,
Nor suffer him with strength impair'd to fight

8. Power; prerogative.

God hath a sovereign right over us, as we are his creatures, and by virtue of this right, he might, without injustice, have imposed difficult tasks;
but in making laws, he hath not made use of this right.

9. Immunity; privilege.

Let them but have their rights, are ever forward
In celebration of this day with shews.

Their only thought and hope was to defend their own rights and liberties, due to them by the law.

10. The side; left.

The radiant image of his glory, sat
His only Son.

11. RIGHTS. In a direct line;

Arms failing, the whole tract sinks down to rights into the abyss, and is swallowed up by it.

12. TO RIGHTS. Deliverance from error.

Several have gone about to inform them, and set them to rights; but, for want of that knowledge of the present system of nature, have not given the satisfaction expected.

TO RIGHT. v. a. To do justice to; to establish in possession; justly claimed; to relieve from wrong.

How will this grieve you,
When you shall come to clearer knowledge, that
You thus have publish'd me? gentle my lord,
You scarce can right me thoroughly.

If the injured person be not righted, every one of them is wholly guilty of the injustice, and bound to restitution.

I could not expedient see
On this side death, to right our family.

Some seeking unto courts, and judicial endeavours to right ourselves, are still innocent.

Make my father known,
To right my honour, and redeem your own.

RIGHTEOUS. adj. [nithprie, Saxon; whence rightwys in old authors, and rightwisely in bishop Fisher: so much are words corrupted by pronunciation]

1. Just; honest; virtuous; uncorrupt.

That far be from thee, to slay the righteous with the wicked, and that the righteous should be as the wicked.

2. Equitable; agreeing with right.

Kid my rival too, for he no less Deserves; and I thy righteous doom will bless.

RIGHTEOUSLY. adv. [from righteous.]

Honestly; virtuously.

Athens did righteously decide,
When Phocion and when Socrates were try'd;
As righteously they did those dooms repent,
Still they were wise, whatever way they went.

RIGHTEOUSNESS. n. f. [from righteous.]

Justice; honesty; virtue;
goodness; integrity.

The scripture, ascribing to the persons of men righteousness, is a proof of their manifold virtues, may not be contradictory, though it did thereby clear them from all faults.

Here wretched Phlegias warns the world with cries,
Cou'd warning make the world more just or wise;
Learn righteously, and dread th' avenging deities.

Good men often suffer, and that even for the sake of righteousness.

RIGHTFUL. adj. [right and full.]

1. Having the right; having the just claim.

As in this haughty great attempt,
They laboured to supplant the rightful heir;
I lost my liberty, and they their lives.

Some will mourn in ashes, some coal black,
For the deposing of a rightful king.

2. Honest; just; agreeable to justice.

Nor would, for gold or fee,
Be won, their rightful causes down to tread.

Gather all the smiling hours;
Such as with friendly care have guarded
Patriots and kings in rightful wars.

RIGHTFULLY. adv. [from rightful.]

According to right; according to justice.

Henry, who claimed by succession, was sensible that his title was not found; but was rightfully in Mortimer, who had married the heir of York.

Dryden's Preface to Fables.

RIGHT-HAND. n. f. Not the left.

The rank of officers, by the murmuring stream,
Left on your right-hand brings you to the place.

RIGHTFULNESS. n. f. [from rightful.]

Moral rectitude.

But still although we fall of perfect rightfulness,
Seek we to tame these superfluities,
Nor wholly wink though void of purest rightfulness.

RIGHTLY. adv. [from right.]

1. According to truth or justice; properly; suitably; not erroneously.

Each of his reign allotted, rightlier call'd Pow'rs of fire, air, water, and caus'd beneath.

Descend from heav'n, Urania! by that name
If rightly thou art call'd.

For glory done
Of triumph, to be stild great conquerors,
Patious of mankind, gods, and sons of gods;
Destroyers rightlier call'd, and plagues of men.

A man can never have to certain a knowledge, that a proposition, which contradicts the clear principles of his own knowledge, was divinely revealed, or that he understands the words rightly, wherein it is delivered, as he has, that the contrary is true.

Is this a bridal or a friendly feast?
Or from their deeds I rightlier may divine,
Unseemly flown with incoherence or wine.

2. Honestly; uprightly..

Let not my jealousies be your dishonour;
You may be rightly just, whatever I shall think.

3. Exactly.

Should I grant, thou didst not rightly see;
Then thou wert still deceiv'd.

4. Straitly; directly.

We with one end; but differ in order and way,
that leadeth right to that end.

RIGHTNESS. n. f. [from right.]

1. Conformity to truth; exemption from being wrong; rectitude; not error.

It is not necessary for a man to be assured of the rightness of his conscience, by such an infallible certainty of persuasion, as amounts to the clearness of a demonstration; but it is sufficient if he knows it upon grounds of such a probability, as shall exclude all rational grounds of doubting.

Like brute beasts we travel with the herd, and are never so solicitous for the rightness of the way, as for the number or figure of our company.

2. Straitness.

Sounds move strongest in a right line, which nevertheless is not caused by the rightness of the line, but by the shortness of the distance.

RIGID. adj. [rigida, French; rigidus, Latin.]

1. Stiff; not to be bent; unpliant.

A body, that is hollow, may be demonstrated to be more rigid and inflexible, than a solid one of the same substance and weight.

2. Severe; inflexible.

His severe judgment giving law,
His modest fancy kept in awe;
As rigid husbands jealous are;
When they believe their wives too fair.

3. Unremitted; unmitigated.

Queen of this universe! do not believe
Those rigid threats of death; ye shall not die.

4. Sharp; cruel. It is used somewhat harshly by Philips.

And Agincourt, deep ting'd with blood, confess
What the Siliures vigour unwithstood
Could do in rigid fight.

RIG

RIGIDITY. n. f. [rigidité, French; from rigid.]

1. Stiffness.

Rigidity is said of the solids of the body, when being stiff or impliable, they cannot readily perform their respective offices; but a fibre is said to be rigid, when its parts so strongly cohere together, as not to yield to that action of the fluids, which ought to overcome their resistance in order to the preservation of health: it is to be remedied by fomentations.

Rigidity of the organs is such a state as makes them resist that expansion which is necessary to carry on the vital functions: rigidity of the vessels and organs must necessarily follow from the rigidity of the fibres. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. Stiffness of appearance; want of easy or airy elegance.

This severe observation of nature, by the one in her commonest, and by the other in her absolute forms, must needs produce in both a kind of rigidity, and consequently more naturalness than gracefulness. Wotton's Architecture.

RIGIDLY. adv. [from rigid.]

1. Stiffly; unpliantly.

2. Severely; inflexibly; without remission; without mitigation.

RIGIDNESS. n. f. [from rigid.] Stiffness; severity; inflexibility.

RIGLET. n. f. [regulet, French.] A flat thin square piece of wood.

The pieces that are intended to make the frames for pictures, before they are molded, are called riglets. Moxon.

RIGOL. n. f. A circle. Used in Shakespeare for a diadem.

This sleep is found; this is a sleep,
That, from this golden rigol, hath divorc'd
So many English kings. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

RIGOUR. n. f. [rigor, Latin.]

1. Cold; stiffness.

The rest his look
Bound with Gorgonian rigour, not to move. Milton.

2. A convulsive shuddering with sense of cold.

Rigors, ebullions, and a fever attend every such new suppuration. Blackmore.

A right regimen, during the rigor or cold fit in the beginning of a fever, is of great importance; a long continued rigor is a sign of a strong disease: during the rigor, the circulation is less quick, and the blood actually stagnates in the extremities, and, pressing upon the heart, may produce concretions; therefore a rigor increases an inflammation. Arbutnot.

3. Severity; sternness; want of condescension to others.

Nature has got the victory over passion, all his rigour is turned to grief and pity. Denham's Sophy.
Rigour makes it difficult for sliding virtue to recover. Clarissa.

4. Severity of life; voluntary pain; austerity.

He resumed his rigors, esteeming this calamity such a one as should not be outlived, but that it became men to be martyrs to. Fell.

Does not looseness of life, and a want of necessary sobriety in some, drive others into rigors that are unnecessary? Spratt.

This prince lived in this convent, with all the rigor and austerity of a capuchin. Addison on Italy.

5. Strictness; unabated exactness.

It may not seem hard, if in cases of necessity certain profitable ordinances sometimes be relaxed, rather than all men always strictly bound to the general rigor thereof. Hooker.

Heat and cold are not, according to philosophical rigour, the essentials; but are names expressing our passions. Glasseville.

RIM

The base degenerate age requires Severity and justice in its rigour:
This sways an impious bold offending world. Addison.

6. Rage; cruelty; fury.

He at his foe with furious rigour smites,
That strongest oak might seem to overthrow;
The stroke upon his shield to heavy lights,
That to the ground it doubleth him full low. Spenser.

Driven by the necessities of the times and the temper of the people, more than led by his own disposition to any height and rigour of actions. King Charles.

7. Hardness; not flexibility; solidity; not softness.

The stones the rigor of their kind expel,
And supple into softness as they fell. Dryden.

RIGOROUS. adj. [from rigour.]

1. Severe; allowing no abatement.

He shall be thrown down the Tæpæan rock
With rigorous hands; he hath defied law,
And therefore law shall scorn him further trial,
Than the severity of public power. Shakespeare.

Are these terms hard and rigorous, beyond our capacities to perform? Rogers's Sermons.

2. Exact; scrupulously nice: as, a rigorous demonstration; a rigorous definition.

RIGOROUSLY. adv. [from rigorous.]

1. Severely; without tenderness or mitigation.

Left they faint
At the sad sentence rigorously urg'd,
For I behold them soften'd, and with tears
Bewailing their excess, all terror hide. Milton.

The people would examine his works more rigorously than himself, and would not forgive the least mistake. Dryden.

2. Exactly; scrupulously; nicely.

RILL. n. f. [rivulus, Lat.] A small brook; a little streamlet.

May thy brimmed waves from this
Their full tribute never miss,
From a thousand petty rills,
That tumble down the snowy hills. Milton.

On every thorn delightful wisdom grows,
In every rill a sweet instruction flows;
But some untought, o'erhear the whispering rill,
In spite of sacred leisure blockheads still. Young.

TO RILL. v. n. [from the noun.] To run in small streams.

Lo! Apollo, mighty king, let envy,
Hil-judging and verbose, from Lethe's lake,
Draw tuns unmeasurable; while thy favour Administers to my ambitious thirst
The wholesome draught from Aganippe's spring
Genuine, and with soft murmurs gently rilling
Adown the mountains where thy daughters haunt. Prior.

RILLET. n. f. [corrupted from rivulet.] A small stream.

A creek of Off, between two hills, delivering a little fresh rillet into the sea. Carrow.

'Th' industrious muse thus labours to relate Those rilllets that attend proud Tamer and her state. Drayton.

RIM. n. f. [juma, Saxon.]

1. A border; a margin.

It keeps of the same thickness near its centre; while its figure is capable of variation towards the rim. Crew.

2. That which encircles something else.

We may not affirm, that ruptures are confinable unto one side, as the peritoneum or rim of the belly may be broke; or its perforations relaxed in either. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The drum-maker uses it for rimbs. Mortimer.

RIMM. n. f. [jrim, Saxon.]

1. Hoar frost.

Branding upon a glass green dew; and in rime

RIN

frosts you shall find dr'ps of dew upon the rim of glass windows. Bacon.

In a hoar frost, a rine is a multitude of quadrangular prisms piled without any order one over another. Crom.

2. [Rima, Latin.] A hole; a chink. Not used.

Though birds have no epiglottis, yet can they contract the rim or chink of their larynx, to so to prevent the admission of wet or dry indigested. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO RIME. v. n. [from the noun.] To freeze with hoar frost.

TO RIMPLE. v. a. To pucker; to contract into contugations. See CRUMPLE and RUMPLE.

The skin was tense, also rimpled and blistered. Wileman.

RIMY. adj. [from rime.] Steamy; foggy; full of frozen mist.

The air is now cold, hot, dry, or moist; and then thin, thick, foggy, rimy, or poisonous. Harvey.

RIND. n. f. [rinb, Saxon; rinde, Dutch.] Bark; husk

Therewith a piteous yelling voice was heard,
Crying, O spare with guilty hands to tear
My tender sides in this rough rind embair'd. Spenser.
Within the infant rind of this small flower
Poison hath residence, and medicine power. Shakespeare.

These plants are neither red nor polished, when drawn out of the water, till their rind have been taken off. Boyle.

Others whose fruit, burnish'd with golden rind, Hung amiable. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Thou canst not touch the freedom of this mind
With all thy charms, although this corporal rind
Thou hast immanc'd. Milton.

This monument, thy maiden beauty's due,
High on a plane-tree shall be higg to view;
On the smooth rind the passenger shall see Thy name engrav'd, and worship Helen's tree. Dryden.

TO RIND. v. n. [from the noun.] To decorticate; to bark; to husk.

RING. n. f. [jring, Saxon.]

1. A circle; an orbicular line.

In this habit
Met I my father with his bleeding rings,
Their precious gems new lost. Shakespeare.

Bubbles of water, before they began to exhibit their rings to the naked eye, have appeared through a prism girded about with many parallel and horizontal rings. Newton.

2. A circle of gold or some other matter worn as an ornament.

About a hoop of gold, a paltry ring. Shakespeare.
I have seen old Roman rings so very thick about,
and with such large stones in them, that 'tis no wonder a fop should reckon them a little cumbersome in the summer. Addison.

3. A circle of metal to be held by.

The rings of iron, that on the doors were hung,
Sent out a jarring sound, and harshly rung. Dryden.
Some eagle got the ring of my box in his beak,
With an intent to let it fall, and devour it. Swift.

4. A circular course.

Chaste Diana,
Goddess presiding o'er the rapid race,
Place me, O place me in the dusty ring,
Where youthful charioteers contend for glory! Smith.

5. A circle made by persons standing round.

Make a ring about the corpse of Caesar,
And let me show you him that made the will. Shakespeare.

The Italians, perceiving themselves almost envied, cast themselves into a ring, and retired back into the city. Hayward.

Round my armour a new ring they made,
And footed it about the sacred shade. Dryden.

6. A number of bells harmonically tuned.

A squirrel spends his little rage,
In jumping round a rowling eye;
The cage as either side turn'd up,
Striking a ring of bells a toy. Prior.

7. The sound of bells or any other sonorous body.

Stop the holes of a hawk's bell, it will make no ring, but a flat noise or rattle. Bacon.
Hawks bell, that have holes, give a greater ring, than if the pellet did strike upon brass in the open air. Bacon.

Sullen Meloch fled,
Hath left in shadows dread
His burning idol all of black and hue;
In vain with cymbals ring,
They call the grisly king. Milton.

8. A sound of any kind.

The king, full of confidence, as he had been victorious in battle, and had prevailed with his parliament, and had the ring of acclamations fresh in his ears, thought the rest of his reign should be but play. Bacon's Henry VII.

womb, was feigned to be the son of Apollo.

Hayward.

Rip this heart of mine
Out of my breast, and shew it for a coward's.

Osway.

The conscious husband, whom like symptoms seize,

Charges on her the guilt of their disease,
Affecting fury acts a madman's part,
He'll rip the fatal secret from her heart. Granville.

3. To disclose; to search out; to tear up;
to bring to view.

Let it be lawful for me to rip up to the very bottom, how and by whom your discipline was planted, at such time as this age we live in began to make first trial thereof. Parker.

You rip up the original of Scotland. Spenser.

This ripping up of ancestors is very pleasing unto me, and indeed favoureth of some reading

Spenser on Ireland.

They ripped up all that had been done from the beginning of the rebellion. Clarendon.

The relations considering that a trial would rip up old foes, and discover things not so much to the reputation of the deceased, they dropt their design. Arbutnot.

RIP'E, adj. [ripe, Saxon; rijp, Dutch.]

1. Brought to perfection in growth; mature.

Macbeth

Is ripe for shakings, and the powers above Put on their instruments. Shakespeare.

ment.

At thirteen years old he was ripe for the university. Fell.

Ripe for heav'n, when fate Aeneas calls,
Then shalt thou bear him up, sublime, to me. Dryden.

To RIPEN, v. n. [from the adjective] To ripen; to grow ripe; to be matured.

Ripen is now used.

From hour to hour we ripe and ripe,
And then from hour to hour we rot and rot.

Shakespeare.

Slubber not business for my sake, Baltham;
But stay the very ripen of the time. Shakespeare.

Though no stone tell thee what I was, yet thou,
In my grave's inside, see what thou art now;
Yet thou'rt not yet so good, till us death lay
To ripe and mellow there, we are stubborn clay.

Donne.

To RIPEN, v. a. To mature; to make
ripe.

He is retir'd, to ripe his growing fortunes;
To Scotland. Shakespeare.

RIPENLY, adv. [from ripe.] Maturely;

It fits us therefore ripenly;
Our chariots and our horsemen be in readiness.

Shakespeare.

To RIPEN, v. n. [from ripe.] To grow
ripe.

This is the state of man; to-day he puts forth
The tender leaves of hope, to-morrow blossoms,
And bears his blushing honours thick upon him;
The third day come a troth, a killing frost;
And when he thinks, good easy man, full surely
His greatness is a ripening, nips his root:
And then he falls as I do. Shakespeare.

Afore the four grape is ripening in the flower.

Isaiah, xviii. 5.

The picking of a fruit, before it ripeneth, ripens
the fruit more suddenly. Bacon's Natural History.

Trees, that ripen latest, blossom soonest; as peaches and cornelians; and it is a work of providence that they blossom so soon; for otherwise they could not have the sun long enough to ripen.

Bacon's Natural History.

Melons on beds of ice are taught to bear,
And strangers to the sun yet ripen here. Granville.

To RIPEN, v. a. To mature; to make
ripe.

My father was no tutor;
And that I'll prove on better men than Somerset,
Were growing time once ripen'd to my will.

Shakespeare.

When to ripen'd manhood he shall grow,
The greedy sailor shall the seas forego. Dryden.

That I settled
Your father in his throne, 'twas for your sake,
I left th' acknowledgement for time to ripen.

Dryden.

The genial sun
Has daily, since his course begun,
Rejoic'd the metal to refine,
And ripen'd the Peruvian mine. Addison.

Be this the cause of more than mortal hate,
The rest succeeding times shall ripen into hate.

Pope.

Here elements have lost their uses;
All ripens not, nor earth produces. Swift.

RIPENESS, n. f. [from ripe.]

Time, which made them their fame out-live,
To Cowley scarce did ripeness give. Denham.

3. Perfection; completion.

To this purpose were those harmonious tunes of palms devised for us, that they, which are either in years but young, or reaching perfection of virtue as yet not grown to ripeness, might, when they think they gag, become

Hooker.

This royal infant promises
Upon this land a thousand thousand blessings,
Which time shall bring to ripeness. Shakespeare.

I to manhood am arriv'd so near,
And inward ripeness doth much less appear,
That some more timely happy spirits indu'th.

Milton.

4. Fitness; qualification.

Men must endure
Their going hence, even as their coming hither:
Ripeness is all. Shakespeare's King Lear.

RIPPER, n. f. [from rip.] One who rips; one who tears; one who lacer-ates.

To RIPPLE, v. n. To fret on the sur-

As they ran his library to view,
 And antique registers fur to view,
 There chanced to the prince's hand to rise
 An ancient book. Spenser.

13. To be elevated in situation.

He had an ancient oak of all her boughs;
 Then on a rising ground the trunk he plac'd,
 Which with the spurs of his dead toe he grac'd. Dryden.

A house we saw upon a rising.
 Ash, on banks of rising grounds near rivers, will thrive exceedingly. Mortimer's Husbandry.

RISE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of rising, locally or figuratively.

2. The act of mounting from the ground.

Leaping with weights, the arms are first cast backwards and then forwards, with so much the greater force; for the hands go backward before they take their rise. Bacon.

3. Eruption; ascent.

Upon the candle's going out, there is a sudden rise of water; for the flame filling no more place,
 the air and water succeed. Bacon.

4. Place that favours the act of mounting aloft.

Rais'd so high, from that convenient rise
 She took her flight, and quickly reach'd the skies. Greub.

Since the arguments against them rise from common received opinions, it happens, in controversial discourses, as it does in the assaulting of towns, where, if the ground be but firm, whereon the batteries are erected, there is no farther inquiry of whom it is borrowed, so it affords but a fit rise for the present purpose. Locke.

5. Elevated place.

Such a rise, as duth at once invite
 A pleasure, and a reverence from the sight. Dunkam.

6. Appearance as of the sun in the East.

Phœbus! say;
 The world to which you fly so fast,
 From us to them can pay you haste
 With no such object, and salute your rise
 With no such wonder, as De Mouray's eyes. Waller.

7. Encrease in any respect.

8. Encrease of price.

Upon a breach with Spain, must be considered the present state of the king's treasure, the rise or Spanish war. Temple.

The bishops have had share in the gradual rise of lands. Swijt.

9. Beginning; original.

It has its rise from the lazy admonitions of those who give rules and propole examples, without joining practice with their instructions. Locke.

All wickedness taketh its rise from the heart, and the design and intention with which a thing is done, frequently discriminates the goodness or evil of the action. Nelson.

His reign quickly peopled it, and gave rise to the republic, which calls itself after his name. Addison.

10. Elevation; encrease of sound.

In the ordinary rises and falls of the voice, there fall out to be two herms between the union and the diapason. Bacon.

RISEN. part. [from rise.]

RISER. n. s. [from rise.] One that rises.

The idle Æææ, where the palace stands
 Of the early riser, with the rosy hands,
 Active Aurora; where she loves to dance. Chapman.

RISIBILITY. n. s. [from risible.] The quality of laughing.

How comes lowliness of stile to be so much the propriety of Satyr, that without it a poet can be no more a satyr, than without risibility he can be a man? Dryden.

Whatever the philosophers may talk of their risibility, nothing is a more noble expression than laughing. Arbutnot.

RISIBLE. adj. [risible, French; risibilis, Latin.]

1. Having the faculty or power of laugh- ing.

We are in a merry world, laughing is our business; as if, because it has been made the definition of man that he is risible, his manhood consisted in nothing else. Gougeon of the Tongue.

2. Ridiculous; exciting laughter.

RISK. n. s. [risque, French; riesgo, Spanish.] Hazard; danger; chance of harm.

Some run the risk of an absolute ruin for the gaining of a present supply. L'Estrange.

When an intemperate despot of discipline, nurtured into contempt of all order by a long risk of licence, shall appear before a church governor, severity and resolution are that governor's virtue. South.

By allowing himself in what is innocent, he would run the risk of being betrayed into what is not so. Atterbury.

An innocent man ought not to run an equal risk with a guilty one. Atterbury.

To RISK. v. a. [risquer, French.] To hazard; to put to chance; to endanger.

Who would hope new fame to rise,
 Or risk his well-established praise,
 That, his high genius to approve,
 Had drawn a George or carv'd a Jove? Addison.

RISKER. n. s. [from risk.] He who risks.

He thither came, to observe and smook
 What courses other riskers took. Burton.

RISSE. The obsolete preterite of rise.

Rise, not the consular men and left their places,
 So soon as thou let it down; and tied thy side? Ben Jonson.

RITE. n. s. [rit, French; ritus, Latin.] Solemn act of religion; external observance.

The ceremonies, we have taken from such as were before us, are not things that belong to this or that sect, but they are the ancient rites and customs of the church. Hooker.

It is by God consecrated into a sacrament, a holy rite, a means of conveying to the worthy receiver the benefits of the body and blood of Christ. Hammond's Fundamentals.

When the prince her funeral rites had paid,
 He plow'd the Tyrrhene seas. Dryden.

RITUAL. adj. [rituel, French.] Solemnly ceremonious; done according to some religious institution.

Instant I bade the priests prepare
 The ritual sacrifice, and solemn pray'r. Prior.

If to tradition were added, certain constant ritual and emblematical observances, as the emblems were expressive, the memory of the thing recorded would remain. Forbes.

RITUAL. n. s. [from the adjective.] A book in which the rites and observances of religion are set down.

An heathen ritual could not instruct a man better than these several pieces of antiquity in the particular ceremonies that attended different sacrifices. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

RITUALIST. n. s. [from ritual.] One skilled in the ritual.

RIVAGE. n. s. [French.] A bank; a coast. Not in use.

Think
 You stand upon the rivage, and behold
 A city on the incessant billows dancing;
 For so appears this fleet. Shakespeare.

RIVAL. n. s. [rivalis, Latin.]

1. One who is in pursuit of the same thing which another man pursues; a competitor.

Oh love! thou sternly dost thy power maintain,
 And wilt not bear a rival in thy reign;
 Tyrants and thou all fellowship disdain. Dryden.

2. A competitor in love.

She saw her father was grown her adverse party, and yet her fortune such as she must favour her rival. Sidney.

France and Burgundy, Great rivals in our younger daughter's love. Shakespeare.

Your rival's image in your worth I view;
And what I lov'd in him, esteem in you. Granville.
RIVAL. adj. Standing in competition;
making the same claim; emulous.

Had I but the means
To hold a rival place with one of them,
I should be fortunate. Shakespeare.

Equal in years, and rival in renown
With Epaphus, the youthful Phaeton Like honour claims. Dryden.

You bark to be employ'd,
While Venus is by rival dogs enjoy'd. Dryden.
To RIVAL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To stand in competition with another;
to oppose.

Those, that have been raised by the interest of some great minister, trample upon the steps by which they rise, to rival him in his greatness, and at length step into his place. South.

2. To emulate; to endeavour to equal or excel.

Ambitious fool! with horny hoofs to pass
O'er hollow arches of rebounding brass;
To rival thunder in its rapid course,
And imitate inimitable force. Dryden's Æneis.

O thou, too great to rival or to praise,
Forgive, lamented shade, these duteous lays.
Lee had thy fire, and Congreve had thy wit;
And copyist, here and there, some likeness hit;
But none possess'd thy graces, and thy ease;
In thee alone 'twas natural to please! Haire.

To RIVAL. v. n. To be competitors.
Out of use.

Burgundy,
We first address'd toward you, who with this king
Have rival'd for our daughter. Shakespeare.

RIVALITY. n. s. [from rivalitas, Latin;
RIVALRY. n. s. [from rival.] Competition;
emulation.

It is the privilege of posterity to set matters right between those antagonists, who, by their rivalry for greatness, divided a whole age. Addison.

RIVALSHIP. n. s. [from rival.] The state or character of a rival.

To RIVE. v. a. preter. rived; part.
riven. [nyft, broken, Saxon; rijven, Dutch; river, French, to drive.] To split; to cleave; to divide by a blunt instrument; to force in disruption.

At his haughty helmet
So hugely struck, that it the steel did rive
And cleave his head. Spenser.

The varlet at his plaint was grieved sore,
That his deep wounded heart in two did rive. Spenser.

Through ripen clouds and molten firmament,
The fierce three-forked engine making way,
Both lofty towers and highest trees hath rent. Spenser.

O Cicero!
I have seen tempests, when the scolding winds
Have ripen'd the knotty oaks; but ne'er till now
Did I go through a tempest dropping fire. Shakespeare.

As one he stood escap'd from cruel fight,
Sore toil'd, his ripen arms to havock hewn. Milton.

The neighbouring forests, formerly shaken and ripen with the thunder-bolts of war, did envy the sweet peace of Drulina. Hawel's Vocal Forest.

Had I not been blind, I might have seen
You ripen oak, the fairest of the green. Dryden.
Let it come;

Let the fierce lightning blast, the thunder rive me.
Rive.

To RIVE. v. n. To be split; to be divided by violence.

Freeze the ripen, splits, and breaks in any direction. Woodward.

To RIVE. for derive or direct. Not used.
Ten thousand French have taken the sacrament,

To rive their dangerous artillery
Upon no christian soul but English Talbot. Shakespeare.

To RIVAL. v. a. [zenpleb, Saxon, corrugated, rumpied.] To contract into wrinkles and corrugations.

Then droop'd the fading flow'rs, their beauty fled,
And clos'd their sickly eyes and hung the head,
And ripen'd up with heat, lay dying in their bed. Dryden.

And since that plementous autumn now is past,
Whose grapes and peaches have indulg'd your taste,
Take in good part, from our poor poet's board,
Such ripen'd fruits as winter can afford. Dryden.

Alam supricks, with contracting pow'r,
Shrink his thin essence like a ripen'd flow'r. Pope.

RIVEN. part. of rive.

RIVER. n. s. [riviere, French; rius, Lat.] A land current of water bigger than a brook.

It is a most beautiful country, being stored throughout with many goodly rivers, replenished with all sorts of fish. Spenser.

The first of these rivers has been celebrated by the Latin poet for the gentleness of its course, as the other for its rapidity. Addison in Italy.

RIVER-DRAGON. n. s. A crocodile. A name given by Milton to the king of Egypt.

Thus with ten wounds
The river-dragon, tam'd at length, submits
To let his sojourners depart. Milton's Paradise Lost.

RIVERET. n. s. [diminutive of river.]
A small stream; a rill.

Bringing all their riverets in,
There ends; a new song to begin. Drayton.

Calls down riveret from her spring,
Their queen upon her way to bring. Drayton.

RIVER-GOD. n. s. Tutelary deity of a river.

Hilwig hung as strait as the hair of a river-god rising from the water. Arbutnot and Pope.

RIVER-HORSE. n. s. Hippopotamus.

Role,
As plants ambiguous between sea and land,
The river-horse and scaly crocodile. Milton.

RIVET. n. s. [river, French, to break the point of a thing; to drive.] A fastening pin clenched at both ends.

The armourers accomplishing the knights,
With busy hammers closing rivets up,
Give dreadful note of preparation. Shakespeare.

Thy armour
I'll crush, and unlock the rivets all,
But I'll be master of it. Shakespeare.

Though Valeria's fair, and though the loves me too,

'Guilt her my soul is arm'd on every part;
Yet there are secret rivets to my heart,
Where Berenice's charms have found the way,
Subtle as lightning. Dryden's Tyrannick Love.

The verb in fashion is, when numbers flow
So smooth and equal, that no fight can find
The rivet, where the polish'd piece was join'd. Dryden.

The rivets of those wings inclos'd Fit not each other. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
This instrument should move easy upon the rivet. Sharp.

To RIVET. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fasten with rivets.

This man,
If all our fire were out, would fetch down new
Out of the hand of Jove; and rivet him
To Caucasus, should he but frown. Ben Jonson.

2. To fasten strongly; to be made immoveable.

You were to blame to part with
A thing stuck on with oaths upon your finger,
And riveted with faith unto your flesh. Shakespeare.

Why should I write this down, that's riveted, Screw'd to my memory? Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
What one party thought to rivet to a settledness by the influence of the Scots, that the other rejects. King Charles.

Till fortune's fruitless spite had made it known,
Her blows not shook but riveted his throne. Dryden.

Thus hath God not only riveted the notion of himself into our nature, but likewise made the belief of his being, necessary to the peace of our minds and happiness of society. Tillotson.

If the eye sees those things riveted which are loose, where will you begin to rectify the mistake? Locke.

Where we use words of a loose and wandering signification, hence follows mistake and error, which those maxims brought as proofs to establish propositions, wherein the terms stand for undetermined ideas, do by their authority confirm and rivet. Locke.

Rivet and nail me where I stand, ye powers!
Corneille.

They provoke him to the rage
Of fangs and claws, and stopp'd from your hoist, River the panting savage to the ground. Addison.

A similitude of nature and manners, in such a degree as we are capable of, must tie the holy knot;
and rivet the friendship between us. Atterbury.

3. To drive or clench a rivet.

In riveting, the pin you rivet in should stand up right to the plate you rivet it upon, for if it do not stand upright, you will be forced to set it upright, after it is riveted. Mason.

RIVULET. n. s. [rivulus, Lat.] A small river; a brook; a streamlet.

By fountain or by shady rivulet,
He sought them. Milton.

The veins, where innumerable little rivulets have their confluence into the common channel of the blood. Bentley.

I saw the rivulet of Salforata, formerly called Albola, and smelt the stench that arises from its water, which Martial mentions. Addison in Italy.

RIXDOLLAR. n. s. A German coin, worth about four shillings and six-pence sterling. Diss.

ROACH. n. s. [from rutilus, Latin, red-haired.]

A roach is a fish of no great reputation for his dainty taste: his spawn is accounted much better than any other part of him. he is accounted the water-dog, for his simplicity and foolishness; and the roach, that roaches recover strength, and grow stronger after spawning. Walton's Angler.

Do not venture to approach;
Yet still he leaps at flies. Swift.

ROAD. n. s. [rade, French; route, French;
route is via itita.]

1. Large way; path.

Would you not think him a madman, who,
whilst he might easily ride on the bearn road way, should trouble himself with breaking up of gaps? Suckling.

To God's eternal house direct the way,
A broad and ample road. Milton.

The liberal man dwells always in the road. Fall.
To be indifferent whether we embrace falsehood or truth, is the great road to error. Locke.

Could stupid atoms, with impetuous speed,
By different roads and adverbic ways proceed,
That here they might encounter, here unite. Blackmore.

There is but one road by which to climb up.
Addison.

2. [Rade, French.] Ground where ships may anchor.

I should be still
Peering in maps for ports and roads;
And every object that might make me fear Misfortune to my ventures. Shakespeare.
About

about the island are many roads, but only one highway.
Sandy's Journey.

Insroad; incursion.

The Volcians stand

Ready, when time shall prompt them, to make road
Upon's again. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Cæsar was desirous of the spoil, for he was, by the former road into that country, famous and rich. Kuells.

The king of Scotland, seeing none came in to Perkin, turned his enterprise into a road, and wasted
Northumberland with fire and sword. Bacon.

4. Journey. The word seems, in this sense at least, to be derived from rode, the preterite of ride: as we say, a short ride; an easy ride.

With easy roads he came to Leicester,
And lodg'd in the abbey. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
He from the East his flaming road begins.
Milton.

5. The act, or state of travelling.

touch a sirloin. Addison.

And if Dan Congreve judges right,
Roast beef and ale make Britons fight. Prior.
It warms the cook maid, not to burn
The roast meat, which it cannot turn. Swift.

To rule the ROAST. To govern; to ma- nage; to preside. It was perhaps ori- ginally roist, which signified a tumult, to direct the populace.

Where champions ruleth the roast,
Thou shalt see disorder is most. Tupper's Husbandry.
The new made duke, that rules the roast.
Shakespeare.

Alma flap-dash, is all again
In every sinew, nerve, and vein;
Runs here and there, like Hamlet's ghost,
While every where she rules the roast. Prior.

ROZ. n. s. [I believe Arabick.] Inspi- rated juices.

The infusion, being evaporated to a thicker consistence, passeth into a jelly, roz, extract, which contain all the virtues of the infusion.

Arbutnot on Alimentis.

To ROB. v. a. [robber, old French; rob- bare, Italian.]

1. To deprive of any thing by unlawful force, or by secret theft; to plunder. To be robbed, according to the present use of the word, is to be injured by theft secret or violent; to rob, is to take away by unlawful violence; and rob- bery, is to take away privately.

It's not enough to break into my garden,
And, like a thief, to come to rob my ground,
But thou wilt brave me with these savage terms? Shakespeare.

Our sins being ripe, there was no preventing of God's justice from reaping that glory in our calamities, which we robbed him of in our prosperity.
King Charles.

I have not here designed to rob him of any part of that commendation, which he has so justly acquired from the whole author, whose fragments only fall to my portion. Dryden.

The water nymphs lament their empty urns, Drooping, rob'd of silver Dirce, mourns. Addison.

and drawn away. Bacon's Natural History.

Nor will I take from any man his due;
But, thus assuming all, he robs from you. Dryden.

Oh double sacrilege on things divine,
To rob the relics, and deface the shrine! Dryden.

ROBBER. n. s. [from rob.] One that plunders by force, or steals by secret means; a plunderer; a thief.

These hairs, which thou dost ravish from my chin,
Will quicken and accuse thee; I'm your host,
With robbers hands, my hospitable favour
You should not ruffle thus. Shakespeare.

Had'st thou not committed Notorious murder on those thirty men
At Ascalon;
Then, like a robber, strip'd them of their robes.

Milton's Agonistes.

The robber must run, ride, and use all the deperate ways of escape; and probably, after all, his sin betrays him to the gaul, and from thence advances him to the gibbet. South.

Bold Prometheus did aspire,
And stole from heav'n the seeds of fire;
A train of ills, a ghastly crew,
The robber's blazing track pursue. Dryden's Horace.

Public robbers are more criminal than petty and common thieves. Davenant.

ROBBERY. n. s. [roberie, old French; from rob.] Theft perpetrated by force or with privacy.

suppressing common thieves and robbers. Temple.

ROBE. n. s. [robba, French; robba, Italian; rauba, low Latin.] A gown of state; a dress of dignity.

Through tatter'd cloaths small vices do appear;
Riches and fur'd gowns hide all. Shakespeare.

My Nan shall be the queen of all fairies,
Finely attir'd in a robe of white. Shakespeare.

The

The last good king, whom willing Rome obey'd,
Was the poor offspring of a captive maid;
Yet he those robes of empire justly bore,
Which Romulus, our sacred founder, wore.

Dryden.
TO ROBE. v. a. [from the noun.] To dress pompously; to invest.

What christian soldier will not be touched with a religious emulation, to see an order of Jesus do such service for enlarging the christian borders; and an order of St. George only to robes, and feast, and perform rites and observances? Bacon.

There in long robes the royal magi stand;
The sage Chaldeans rob'd in white appear'd,
And Brachmans. Pope's Temple of Fame.
Robed in loose array the came to bathe. Thomson.

Spanish; spinrock, Dutch.] A distaff held in the hand, from which the wool was spun by twirling a ball below.

A learned and a manly soul
I purpos'd her; that should with even powers,
The rock, the spindle, and the sheers, controul
Of destiny, and spin her own fire hours. Dr. Johnson.

On the rock a scanty measure place
Of coal flux, and turn the wheel apace. Dryden.
Flow from the rock my flax, and swiftly flow,
Peruse thy thread, this spindle runs below. Farnel.

TO ROCK. v. a. [roquer, French.]

1. To shake; to move backwards and forwards.

If, by a quicker rocking of the engine, the smoke were more swiftly shaken, it would, like water, vibrate to and fro. Boyle.

The wind was laid; the whispering sound
Was dumb; a rising earthquake rock'd the ground. Dryden.

A living tortoise, being turned upon its back, could help itself only by its neck and head, by pushing against the ground to rock itself as in a cradle, to find out the side towards which the inequality of the ground might more easily permit to roll its shell. Ray on the Creation.

2. To move the cradle, in order to procure sleep.

Come, take hand with me,
And rock the ground whereon these sleepers be. Shakespeare.

ROD. n. f. [rode, Dutch.]

1. A long twig.

Some chide a hazel rod of the same year's shoot, and this they bind on to another straight stick of any wood, and walking softly over those places, where they suspect the bowels of the earth to be enrich'd with metals, the wand will, by bowing towards it, discover it. Boyle.

2. A kind of scepter.

Sh' had all the royal makings of a queen;
As holy oil, Edward Confessor's crown,
The rod and bird of peace. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

The pallid rod of Hermon, or his opiate rod.

O gentle sleep, I cry'd,
Why is thy gift to me alone deny'd?
Mildest of beings, friend to ev'ry clime,
Where lies my error, what has been my crime?
Beasts, birds, and cattle feel thy balmy rod;
The drowsy mountains wave, and seem to nod;
The torrents cease to chide, the seas to roar,
And the hush'd waves recline upon the shore.

Harte.

And little eagles wave their wings in gold.
Pope.
TO ROLL. v. n.

1. To be moved by the successive application of all parts of the surface to a plane: as a cylinder.
Fire must rend the sky,
And wheel on the earth, devouring where it rolls.
Milton.

Reports, like snow-balls, gather still the farther they roll.
Government of the Tongue.
I'm pleas'd with my own work, Jove was not more

With infant nature, when his spacious hand
Had rounded this huge ball of earth and seas,
To give it the first path, and see it roll
Along the vast abyss.
Dryden.

2. To run on wheels.
He next essays to walk, but downward press'd,
On four feet imitates his brother beast;
By slow degrees he gathers from the ground
His legs, and to the rolling chair is bound.
Dryden.

3. To perform a periodical revolution.
Thus the year rolls within itself again.
Dryden.
When thirty rolling years have run their rate.
Dryden.

4. To move with the surface variously directed.

be in the roll of beasts that do not honour it.
Baldy.

These signs have mark'd me extraordinary,
And all the courses of my life do shew,
I am not in the roll of common men.
Shakspeare.
The roll and list of that army doth remain.
Davies.

Of that short roll of friends writ in my heart,
There's none, that sometimes greet us not.
Dennis.
'Tis a mathematical demonstration, that these twenty-four letters admit of so many changes in their order, and make such a long roll of differently ranged alphabets, not two of which are alike; that they could not all be exhausted, though a million millions of writers should each write above a thousand alphabets a-day, for the space of a million millions of years.
Bentley.

8. Chronicle.
Please thy pride, and search the herald's roll,
Where thou shalt find thy famous pedigree.
Dryden.

His chamber all was hang'd about with rolls
And old records, from ancient times deriv'd.
Spenser.

The eye of time beholds no name
So dead as thine, in all the rolls of fame.
Pope.

a tale of wild adventures in war and love.

What resounds
In fable or romance of Other's fons
A brave romance who would exactly frame,
First sings his knight from some immortal dame.
Waller.

Some romances entertain the genius, and strengthen it by the noble ideas which they give of things;
but they corrupt the truth of history.
Dryden.

A lie; a fiction. In common speech.
A staple of romance and lies,
False tears and real perjuries,
Where sighs and looks are bought and sold,
And love is made but to be told.
Prior.

ROOF. n. f. [jnoc, Saxon. In the plural Sidney has rooves: now obsolete.]

1. The cover of a house.

Her shoulders be like two white doves,
Perching within square royal rooves. Sidney.
Return to her, and fifty men dismiss'd?
No, rather I abjure all roofs, and choose
To wage against the unity o' th' air. Shakespeare.

2. The house in general.

I'll tell all strictly true,
If time, and food, and wine enough accrue Within your roofs to us; that freely we May sit and banquet. Chapman.

The vault; the inside of the arch that covers a building.

From the magnanimity of the Jews, in causes of most extreme hazard, those strange and unwonted resolutions have grown, which, for all circumstances, no people under the roof of heaven did ever match. Hooker.

The gulf
Should have ascended to the roof of heav'n, Rais'd by your populus troops. Shakespeare.
In thy fane, thy dæmon spirits among,
High on the dismal roof, my banner shall be hung. Dryden.

The eave; the upper part of the

ing till my very roof was dry the of love. Shakespeare.

Or sun themselves abroad in open air,
In all abodes of pestilential kind
To sheep. Dryden's Georgicks.

ROOK. n. f. [jnoc, Saxon.]

1. A bird resembling a crow: it feeds not on carrion, but grain.

Augurs, that understand relations, have,
By magpies, and by choughs, and rooks, brought forth
The secret of man's blood. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Huge flocks of rising rooks forsake their food,
And crying seek the shelter of the wood. Dryden.
The jay, the rook, the daw Aid the full concert. Thomson's Spring.

2. [Rocco, Italian.] A common man at chess.

So have I seen a king on chess,
His rooks and knights withdrawn,
His queen and bishops in distress,
Shifting about grow less and less,
With here and there a pawn. Dryden's Song.

3. A cheat; a trickish rapacious fellow.

I am, like an old rook, who is ruined by gaming, Forced to live on the good fortune of the pushing young men. Wycherley.

To Rook, v. a. [from the noun.] To rob; to cheat.

They rook'd upon us with design,
To out-reform and undermine. Hudibras.
How any one's being put into a mixed herd of unruly boys, and their learning to rook at span-farding, fits them for conversation, I do not know.
Locke on Education.

ROO'KERY. n. f. [from rook.] A nursery of rooks.

No lone house in Wales, with a mountain and a rockery, is more contemplative than this court. Pope.

Light thickens, and the crow
Makes wing to th' rooky wood. Shakespeare.

ROOM. n. f. [jum, Saxon; rums, Gothick.]

1. Space; extent of place great or small.

With new wonder, now he views,
To all delight of human sense expos'd
In narrow rooms, nature's whole wealth. Milton.
If you will have a young man to put his travels into a little room, and in short time gather much, this he must do. Bacon.

2. Space or place unoccupied.

The dry land is such too big for its inhabitants;
and that before they shall want room by encreasing and multiplying, there may be new heavens and a new earth. Bentley.

3. Way unobstructed.

Make room, and let him stand before our face. Shakespeare.
What train of servants, what extent of field,
Shall aid the birth, or give him room to build? Crash.

This paternal regal power, being by divine right, leaves no room for human prudence to place it any where. Locke.

4. Place of another; stead.
In evils, that cannot be removed without the manifest danger of greater to succeed in their rooms, wisdom of necessity must give place to necessity. Hooker.

For better ends our kind Redeemer dy'd,
Or the fallen angels' rooms will be but ill supply'd. Rowe.

By contributing to the contentment of other men,
and rendering them as happy as has in our power, we do God's work, are in his place and room. Columy's Sermons.

5. Unobstructed opportunity.

When this princess was in her father's court, she was to celebrate, that there was no prince in the empire, who had room for such an alliance, that was not ambitious of gaining her into his family. Addison's Freeholder.

It put us upon so eager a pursuit of the advantages of life, as leaves no room to reflect on the great author of them. Asterbury.

Will you not look with pity on me?
Is there no hope? Is there no room for pardon? A. Phillips.

7. An apartment in a house; so much of a house as is inclosed within partitions.

I found the prince in the next room,
Washing with kindly tears his gentle cheeks. Shakespeare.

If when she appears in th' room,
Thou dost not quake, and art struck dumb;
Know this,
Thou lov'st amiss;
And to love true,
Thou must begin again, and love anew. Suckling.

In a prince's court, the only question a man is to ask is, whether it be the custom of the court, or will of the prince, to be uncovered in some rooms and not in others? Stirlingfleet.

It will afford me a few pleasant rooms, for such a friend as yourself. Pope.

ROOMAGE. n. f. [from room] Space; place.

Man, of all sensible creatures, has the fullest brain to his proportion, for the lodging of the in-tellective faculties: it must be a silent character of hope, when there is good store of roomage and receipt, where those powers are stowed. Wotton.

ROOMINESS. n. f. [from roomy.] Space; quantity of extent.

ROOMY. adj. [from room.] Spacious; wide; large.

With roomy decks, her guns of mighty strength,
Deep in her draught, and warlike in her length. Dryden.

Nor were the cold-words wanting, nor the root,
Which after-ages call Hybernian fruit. Harte

4. The original; the first cause.

The love of money is the root of all evil, is a truth universally agreed in. Temple

5. The first ancestor.

It was said,
That myself should be the root and father
Of many kings. Shakespeare's Macbeth

Why did my parents send me to the schools,
That I with knowledge might enrich my mind?
Since the desire to know first made men fools,
And did corrupt the root of all mankind. Davies

Whence,
But from the author of all ill, could spring
So deep a malice, to confound the race
Of mankind in one root? Milton's Paradise Lost
They were the roots, out of which sprang two distinct people, under two distinct governments. Locke

6. Fixed residence.

7. Impression; durable effect.

Having this way eased the church, as they thought, of superfluity, they went on till they had plucked up even those things also, which had taken a great deal stronger and deeper root. Hooker

That love took deepest root, which first did grow. Dryden

To ROOT. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To fix the root; to strike far into the earth.

Here follow leas
The dargel, hemlock, and rank samitory
Doth root upon. Shakespeare's Henry V.

Underneath the grove of sycamore,
That westward rooteth, did I see your son. Shakespeare

The multiplying brood of the ungodly shall not take deep rooting from bastard slips, nor lay any fast foundation.

After a year's rooting, then shaking doth good, by loosening of the earth.

The couster must be proportioned to the soil, because, in deep grounds, the weeds root the deeper. Mortimer

2. To turn up earth: as, the hog roots the garden.

3. To sink deep.

If any irregularity chanced to intervene, and cause misapprehensions, he gave them not leave to root and fasten by concealment. Fell

To ROOT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fix deep in the earth.

When ocean, air, and earth at once engage,
And rooted forests fly before their rage,
At once the flashing clouds to battle move. Dryden

Where th' impetuous torrent rushing down,
Huge craggy stones, and rooted trees had thrown,
They left their courses. Dryden's Æneid

2. To impress deeply.

The great important end that God designs it for, the government of mankind, sufficiently shows the necessity of its being rooted deeply in the heart, and put beyond the danger of being torn up by any ordinary violence. South

They have so rooted themselves in the opinion of their party, that they cannot bear an objection with patience. Watts

3. To turn up out of the ground; to eradicate; to extirpate: with a participle; as out or up.

He's a rank weed,
And we must root him out. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Soon shall we drive back Alcibiades,
Who, like a boar too savage, doth root up
His country's peace. Shakespeare's Timon of Athens

The Egyptians think it sin to root up or to bite their locks or onions, which they serve with holiness. Raleigh's History of the World

Root up wild olives from thy labour'd lands. Dryden

The royal husbandman appear'd,
And plough'd, and sow'd, and till'd;
The thorns he rooted out, the rubbish clear'd,
And blest th' obedient field. Dryden

4. To destroy; to banish: with particles.
Not to destroy, but root them out of heav'n.

In vain we plant, we build, our stores increase,
If conscience roots up all our inward peace. Granville ROOT'ED. adj. [from root.] Fixed; deep; radical.

Pluck from the memory a rooted sorrow,

 Wray of aged Pithon's saffron bed,

Had spread her purple robe through dewy air. Spenser.

A smile that glow'd
 Celestially red, love's proper hue

Fairer blossom! do not slight
 That eye, which you may know I on;

The rose morn reigns her light,
 And milder glory, to the noon.

As Thersites staid, the race adoin,
 So Jy honour'd Helen in the pride

Of Iacredman, and of Greece beside. Dryden.

While blooming youth and gay delight
 Sit on the rosy cheeks contest,

Thou hast, my dear, undoubted right
 To thine, h'er this dust'd breast.

Pri.

TO ROT, v. n. [rotan, Saxon; rotten Dutch.] To putrify; to lose the cohesion of its parts.

A man may rot even hang. Shakespeare.
 From hour to hour we ripe and ripe,
 And then from hour to hour we rot and rot.

Being more nearly exposed to the air and weather, the bodies of the animals would suddenly corrupt and rot; the bones would likewise all rot in time, except those which were secured by the extraordinary strength of their parts. Woodward.

TO ROT, v. a. To make putrid; to bring to corruption.

No wood shone that was cut down alive, but such as was rotted in stock and root while it grew.

Bacon.

rotatio, Latin.]

1. The act of whirling round like a wheel; the state of being so whirled round; whirl.

Of this kind is some disposition of bodies to re-rotation from East to West; as the main float and float of the sea, by consent of the universe as part of the diurnal motion. Bacon.

By a kind of circulation or rotation, arts have their successive invention, perfection, and traduction from one people to another. Hale.

The axle-trees of chariots take fire by the rapid rotation of the wheels. Newton's Opticks.

In the passions wild orator toil,
 Our spring of action to ourselves is lost.

In fond rotation spread the spotted wing,
 And shiver every feather with desire. Thomson.

2. Vicissitude of succession.

ROTATOR, n. f. [Latin.] That which

 The triumphs of Phlegrean Jove he wrote,

That all the gods admir'd his lofty note. Spenser.

[Routine, French.] Words uttered by mere memory without meaning; me-memory of words without comprehension of the sense.

First rehearse this song by rote,
 To each word a warbling note.

Thy loved did read by rote, and could not spell.

Shakespeare.

He rather saith it by rote to himself, than that he can thoroughly believe it. Bacon's Essays.

All this he understood by rote,
 And as occasion serv'd would quote.

Learn Aristotle's rules by rote,
 And at all hazards boldly quote.

Swift.

To ROT. v. a. [from the noun.] To fix in the memory, without informing the understanding.

Speak to the people

Words roted in your tongue; ballads and syllables
Of no allowance to your bosom's truth. Shakespeare

ROT-GUT. n. s. [rot and gut.] Bad beer. They overwhelm their punch daily with a kind of flat rotgut, we with a bitter dreggish small liquor. Harvey

sign of a rottenness. Whitman's Surgery

ROTUND. adj. [rotunde, French; rotundus, Latin.] Round; circular; spherical.

The cross figure of the christian temples is more proper for spacious buildings than the rotund of the heathen; the eye is much better filled at first entering the rotund, but such as are built in the form of a cross give us a greater variety. Addison

ROTUNDIFOLIOLUS. adj. [rotundus and folium, Latin.] Having round leaves.

ROTUNDITY. n. s. [rotunditas, Latin; rotundité, French; from rotund.]

1. Roundness; sphericity; circularity.
Thou, all-shaking thunder,
Strike flat the thick rotundity of the world. Shakespeare

With the rotundity common to the atoms of all fluids, there is some difference in bulk, else all fluids would be alike in weight. Cruik

Who would part with these solid blessings, for the little fantastical pleasantness of a smooth con-vexity and rotundity of a globe? Bentley's Sermons

2. Circularity.

Rotundity is an emblem of eternity, that has neither beginning nor end. Addison on Medals

ROTUNDO. n. s. [rotondo, Italian.] A building formed round both in the inside and outside; such as the pantheon at Rome. Trevoux

To ROVE. v. m. [roffver, Danish, to range for plunder.] To ramble; to range; to wander.

Thou'st years upon thee, and thou art too full
Of the wars'furrows, to go rove with one That's yet unbruised. Shakespeare's Coriolanus

Faultless thou dropt from his unerring skill,
With the bare power to sin, since free of will;
Yet charge not with thy guilt his bounteous love,
For who has power to walk, has power to rove. Abraham

If we indulge the frequent life and roving of passions, we thereby procure an unattentive habit. Watts

I view'd the effects of that disastrous flame,
Which, kindled by th' imperious queen of love,
Constrain'd me from my native realm to rove. Pope

To ROVE. v. a. To wander over.

Roving the field, I chanc'd
A goodly tract far distant to behold,
Loaden with fruit of fairest colours. Milton

Cherina, as the town the rove's,
A mortal leavenger the law, the lov'd. Gay

ROVER. n. s. [from rove.]

1. A wanderer; a ranger.
2. A fickle inconstant man.
3. A robber; a pirate.

This is the case of rovers by land, as some can-tons in Arabia. Puon's Holy War

4. At ROVERS. Without any particular aim.

Nature shoots not at rovers: even inanimates, though they know not their perfection, yet are they not carried on by a blind unguided impetus;
but that, which directs them, knows it. Glanville's Strepis

Providence never shoots at rovers: there is an arrow that flies by night as well as by day, and God is the person that shoots it. South's Sermons

Men of great reading show their talents on the meanest subjects; this is a kind of shooting at rovers. Addison

ROUGE. n. s. [rouge, French.] Red paint.

ROUGH. adj. [bruh, bruhge, Saxon; rouw, Dutch.]

1. Not smooth; rugged; having inequalities on the surface.

The fiend
O'er bog or steep, through flint, rough, dense, or rare, Purveys his way. Milton

Were the mountains taken all away, the remaining parts would be more unequal than the roughest sea; whereas the face of the earth should resemble that of the calmest sea, if it in the form of its first mass. Burnet's Theory

2. Averse to the taste: as, rough wine.
3. Harsh to the ear.

Molt by the numbers judge a poet's song,
And smooth or rough with them is right or wrong. Pope

4. Rugged of temper; inelegant of manners; not soft; coarse; not civil; severe; not mild; rude.

A fiend, a fury, pitiless and rough,
A wolf, nay worse, a fellow all in buff. Shakespeare
Strait with a band of soldiers tall and rough
On him he seizes. Cowley's Davidides

The booby Pharon only was unkind,
A sultry boatman rough as seas and wind. Prior

5. Not gentle; not proceeding by easy operation.

He gave not the king time to prosecute that gracious method, but forced him to a quicker and rougher remedy. Cloacius

Hippocrates seldom mentions the dose of his medicines, which is somewhat surprising, because his purgatives are generally very rough and strong.

Arbutnot on Cains

6. Harsh to the mind; severe.

Kind words prevent a good deal of that perverseness, which rough and imperious usage often produces in generous minds. Locke

7. Hard featured; not delicate.

A copy chain of theisms, a visage rough,
Deform'd, unfeatur'd, and a skin of buff. Dryden

8. Not polished; not finished by art:
as, a rough diamond.

to form with asperities and inequalities.

Nor bodily, nor ghostly rough could
Roughcast thy figure in a sadder mould. Cleaverland

2. To form any thing in its first rudiments.

In monument they were first practised, and this roughcast unheven poetry was instead of stage plays for one hundred and twenty years. Dryden

ROUGHCAST. n. s. [rough and cast.]

1. A rude model; a form in its rudiments.

The whole piece seems rather a loose model and roughcast of what I design to do, than a complete work. Dugly

2. A kind of plaster mixed with pebbles, or by some other cause very uneven on the surface.

Some man must present a wall; and let him have some plaster, lime, or roughcast about him to figurely wall. Shakespeare

ROUGH DRAUGHT. n. s. [rough and draught.] A draught in its rudiments; a sketch.

My elder brothers came
Rough draughts of nature, ill design'd and lame, Blown off, like blossoms, never made to bear,
Till I came finish'd, her last labour'd care. Dryden

To ROUGH DRAW. v. a. [rough and draw.] To trace coarsely.

His victories we scarce could keep in view,
Or polish 'em to last, as he roughdraw. Dryden

To ROUGHEN. v. a. [from rough.]
To make rough.

Such difference there is in tongues, that the same figure, which roughens one, gives majesty to another, and that was it which Virgil studied in his verses. Dryden

Ah! where must needy poet seek for aid,
When dust and rain at once his coat invade?
His only coat; when dust confus'd with rain,
Roughens the nap, and leaves a mingled stain. Storff

To ROUGHEN. v. n. To grow rough.

The broken landscape,
Ascending, roughens into rigid hills. Thomson

To ROUGHEN W. v. a. [rough and heu.]
To give to any thing the first appearance of form.

There's a divinity that shapes our ends,
Roughens them how we will. Shakespeare's Hamlet

The whole world, without art and dress,
Would be but one great wilderness
And mankind but a savage herd,
For all that nature has confus'd.

ROU

This does but roughen and design,
Leaves art to polish and refine.

Hudibras.

ROUGHENED. partic. adj.

1. Ragged; unpolished; uncivil; unrefined.

A rough seaman, being brought before a justice for some misdemeanour, was by him ordered away to prison, and would not stir; saying, it was better to stand where he was, than go to a worse place.

Bacon's Apophthegms.

2. Not yet nicely finished.

I hope to obtain a candid construction of this rough ill-timber'd discourse.

Hewel.

ROUGHLY. adv. [from rough.]

1. With uneven surface; with asperities on the surface.

2. Harshly; uncivilly; rudely.

Ne Mammon would there let him long remain,
For terror of the torments manifold,
In which the dagned souls he did behold,
But roughly him beset.

Spenser.

Rebuk'd, and roughly sent to prison,
Th' immediate heir of England! was this easy?

Shakespeare.

3. Severely; without tenderness.

Some friends of vice pretend,
That I the tricks of youth too roughly blame.

Dryden.

4. Austere to the taste.

5. Boisterously; tempestuously.

6. Harshly to the ear.

ROUGHNESS. n. s. [from rough.]

1. Superficial asperity; unevenness of surface.

The little roughness or other inequalities of the surface against the cavity of the cylinder, now and then put a stop to the descent or ascent of the sucker.

Boyle.

While the steep, hoar'd, roughness of the wood
Strives with the gentle easiness of the flood.

Denham.

When the diamond is not only found, but the roughness smoothed, cut into a form, and let in gold, then we cannot but acknowledge, that it is the perfect work of art and nature.

Dryden.

Such a perfection as this well fixed, will smooth all the roughness of the way that leads to happiness, and render all the conflicts with our lusts pleasing.

Atterbury.

2. Austere to the taste.

Divers plants contain a grateful sharpness, as lemons; or an austere and inconcocted roughness, as flowers.

Brown.

3. Taste of astringency.

A tobacco-pipe broke in my mouth, and the spitting out the pieces left such a delicious roughness on my tongue, that I champed up the remaining part.

Spenser.

4. Harshness to the ear.

In the roughness of the numbers and cadences of this play, which was so designed, you will see somewhat more masterly than in any of my former tragedies.

Dryden.

The Swedes, Danes, Germans, and Dutch attend to the pronunciation of our words with care, because our syllables resemble theirs in roughness and frequency of consonants.

Swift.

5. Ruggedness of temper; coarseness of manner; tendency to rudeness; coarseness of behaviour and address.

Roughness is a needless cause of discontent;
severity becometh so, but roughness breedeth hate;
even reproofs from authority ought to be grave and not railing.

Bacon.

When our minds eyes are disengag'd,
And quiet in flesh, privations unexpect'd roughness find us, and harshness irritate.

Denham.

Roughness of temper is apt to discomposure
the timorous or modest.

Addison.

6. Absence of delicacy.

Rough feeling, and roughness are not without the hardly used but with sum or price.

Three thousand ducats! 'tis a good round sum.

Shakespeare.

They set a round price upon your head.

Addison.

It is not easy to foresee what a round sum of money may do among a people, who have tamely suffered the Franchise Compté to be seized on.

Addison's Remarks on Italy.

She called for a round sum out of the poor purse.

Hecker.

7. Plain; clear; fair; candid; open.

Round dealing is the honour of man's nature; and a mixture of falsehood is like stay in gold and silver, which may make the metal work the better, but it embaseth it.

Bacon.

8. Quick; brisk.

Painting is a long pilgrimage; if we do not actually begin the journey, and travel at a round rate, we shall never arrive at the end of it.

Dryden.

Sir Roger heard them upon a round trot; and after pausing, told them, that much might be said on both sides.

Addison.

9. Plain; free without delicacy or reserve; almost rough.

Knit your hands, and beat the ground
In a light fantastic round.

Milton.

He did foretell and prophecy of him,
Who to his realms that round hath join'd.

Denham.

They meet, they wheel, they throw their darts after;

They in a round the mingled bodies run;
Flying they follow, and pursuing shun.

Dryden.

How shall I then begin, or where conclude,
To draw a frame so truly circular?

For, in a round, what order can be shew'd,
Where all the parts so equal perfect are?

Dryden.

The mouth of Veluvio has four hundred yards in diameter; for it seems a perfect round.

Addison.

This image on the medal plac'd,
With its bright round of titles grac'd,
And stamp on British coins shall live.

Addison.

When he once attains the utmost round,
He then unto the ladder turns his back,
Looks in the clouds, scanning the base degrees
By which he did ascend.

Shakespeare.

Many are klicked down ere they have climbed the two or three first rounds of the ladder.

Government of the Tongue.

All the rounds like Jacob's ladder rise;
The lowest hid in earth, the topmost in the skies.

Dryden.

This is the last stage of human perfection, the utmost round of the ladder whereby we ascend to heaven.

Norris.

3. The time in which any thing has passed through all hands, and comes back to the first: hence applied to a carousal.

A gentle round fill'd to the brink,
To this and t' other friend I drink.

The feast was serv'd; the bowl was crown'd;
To the king's pleasure went the mirthful round.

Frederick.

4. A revolution; a course ending at the point where it began.

We, that are of purer fire,
Imitate the fiery quize,
Who, in their nightly watchful spheres,
Lead in swift rounds the months and years.

Milton.

No end can to this be found,
'Tis caught but a perpetual fruitless round.

Cowley.

'Tis nothing will please people, unless they be greater than nature intended, what can they expect, but the round of rounds change?

Le Sage.

5. A revolution; a course ending at the point where it began.

We, that are of purer fire,
Imitate the fiery quize,
Who, in their nightly watchful spheres,
Lead in swift rounds the months and years.

Milton.

No end can to this be found,
'Tis caught but a perpetual fruitless round.

Cowley.

pect, but the round of rounds change?

Le Sage.

6. A revolution; a course ending at the point where it began.

How

How then to drag a wretched life beneath
An endless round of still returning woes,
And all the gnawing pangs of vain remorse?
What torment's this? Smith.

Some preachers, prepared only upon two or three points, run the same round from one end of the year to another. Addison.

Till by one countless sum of woes oppress'd,
Heavy with cares, and ignorant of rest,
We find the vital springs relax'd and worn;
Compell'd our common impotence to mourn, Thus through the round of age, to childhood we return. Prior.

5. Rotation; succession in vicissitude.

Such new Utopians would have a round of go-people left both their delights and profits to hearken to his songs. Sidney.

2. Rude; untaught; inelegant.

An ignorant clown cannot learn fine language or a courtly behaviour, when his rustick airs have grown up with him till the age of forty. Mutt's Logick.

3. Brutal; savage.

My soul rebuked I should find the bow'r
Of some full monster fierce with brutish pow'r;
Some rustick wretch, who liv'd in heav'n's despite,
Contemning laws, and trampling on the right.
Pope.

4. Artless; honest; simple.

5. Plain; unadorned.

An altar stood, rustick, of grassy sord. Milton.
With unguents smooth the pebble'd marble shone,
Where ancient Nubia sat, a rustick throne. Pope.

RUSTICK. n. f. A clown; a swain;
an inhabitant of the country.

As nothing is so rude and insolent as a wealthy rustick, all this his kindness is overlooked, and his person most unworthily raised at. South.

RUSTINESS. n. f. [from rusty.] The state of being rusty.

TO RUSTLE. v. n. [Dutch, Saxon.] To make a low continued rattle; to make a quick succession of small noises.

He is coming; I hear the straw rustle.

Shakspeare.

This life
Is nobler than attending for a check;
Richer, than doing nothing for a bauble;
Prouder, than rustling in unpaid-for silk.

Shakspeare.

Thick-swamp'd, both on the ground, and in the air

Bruff'd with the hiss of rustling wings. Milton.

As when we see the winged winds engage,
Rustling from every quarter of the sky,
North, East, and West, in airy twines vy.

Granville.

All begin the attack;
Fans clap, silks rustle, and tough whalebones crack.

Pope.

Not less their number than the milk-white swans,
That o'er the winding of Cayster's springs, Stretch their long necks, and clap their rustling wings. Pope.

RUSTY. adj. [from rust.]

1. Covered with rust; infected with rust.

After a long calm of peace, he was left engaged in a war with a rusty sword and empty purse.

Houzel.

Part scour the rusty shields with steam, and part
New ground the blunted ax. Dryden & Ains.

2. Impaired by inactivity.

He'dor, in his dull and long continued truce,
Is rusty grown. Shakspeare's Troilus and Cressida.

TO RUT. v. n. [ruit, French.] To desire to come together. Used of deer.

RUT. n. f. [rut, French.]

1. Copulation of deer.

The time of going to rut of deer is in September, for that they need the whole summer's feed to make him rut for generation: and if rain come about the middle of September, they go to rut
somewhat the sooner. Bacon.

The ground hereof was the observation of this part in deer after immoderate venery, and about the end of their rut. Brown.

2. [Route, French.] The track of a cart wheel.

Ainsworth.

From hills raise waters headlong fall,
That always eat huge ruts, which, met in one bed hid a vall

With such a confluence of streamers, that on the mountain grounds

Farre off, in frighted shepherds ears the bustling noise rebounds. Clapman.

RUTH. n. f. [from  rue.]

1. Mercy; pity; tenderness; sorrow for the misery of another. Out of use.

O wretch of guests, said he, thy tale hath stirred
My mind to much ruth. Chapman.

All ruth, compassion, mercy he forgot. Farfax.

She fair, he full of baseness and truth,
Lov'd much, hop'd little, and desired nought;
He durst not speak, by suit to purchase ruth.

Farfax.

The better part with Mary and with Ruth Chosen thou hast; and they that overween,
And at thy growing virtues fret their spleen,
No anger find in thee, but pity and ruth. Milt.

2. Misery; sorrow.

The Britons, by Maximilian laid way
With wretched miseries and woful ruth,
Were to those Pagans made an open prey.

Spenser.

RUTHFUL. adj. [ruth and full.] Ruc-

S A B

S Has in English the same hissing sound as in other languages, and unhappily prevails in so many of our words that it produces in the ear of a foreigner a continued sibilation.

In the beginning of words it has invariably its natural and genuine sound: in the middle it is sometimes uttered with a stronger appulse of the tongue to the palate, like s, as rose, refrate, rosy, osier, must, resident, busy, business. It sometimes keeps its natural sound; as loose, disignation; for which I know not whether any rules can be given.

In the end of monosyllables it is sometimes s, as in this; and sometimes z, as in as, has; and generally where s stands in verbs for th, as gives. It seems to be established as a rule, that no noun singular should end with a single s therefore in words written with diphthongs, and naturally long, an e is nevertheless added at the end, as goose, house; and where the syllable is short the s is doubled, and was once se, as ast, anciently asse; wilderness, anciently wildernesse; distress, anciently distresse.

SABAOTH. n. f. [Hebrew.] Signifying an army.

Holy Lord God of sabaots; that is, Lord of hosts. Common Prayer.

SA'BATH. n. f. [An Hebrew word signifying rest; sabbat, Fr. sabbatum, Lat.]

1. A day appointed by God among the Jews, and from them established among Christians for publick worship; the seventh day set apart from works of labour to be employed in piety.

I purport,
And by our holy sabbath have I sworn,
To have the due and forfeit of my bond.

Glad we return'd up to the coast of light,
The sabbath ev'ning. Milton.

Here ev'ry day was sabbath: only free
From hours of prayer, for hours of charity,
Such as the Jews from servile toil release;
Where works of mercy were a part of rest:
Such as blest angels exercise above,
Vary'd with sacred hymns and acts of love;
Such sabbaths as thrones the new enjoys,
Ev'n that perpetual one which for employs
For such virtues in heav'n there are,
In praise alternate, and alternate pray'r.

2. Intermision of pain or sorrow; time of rest.

Never any sabbath of repose
Could free his travels and afflictions deep.

Nor can his blessed soul look down from heav'n,
Or break the eternal sabbath of his rest,
To see her miseries on earth.

Peaceful sleep out the sabbath of the tomb,
And wake to raptures in a life to come. Pope.

SABBATARIAN. n. f. [from sabbath.] One who observes the Sabbath with unreasonable rigour; one who observes the seventh day of the week in opposition to the first.

SA'BATHBREAKER. n. f. [from sabbath and break.] Violator of the sabbath by labour or wickedness.

The asur is the greatest sabbathbreaker, because his plough goes the very Sunday. Bacon's Ess.

SABBATICAL. adj. [from sabbaticus, Lat. sabbaticus, Fr. from sabbath.] Resembling the sabbath; enjoying or bringing intermission of labour.

The appointment and observance of the sabbatical year, and after the seventh sabbatical year a year of jubilee, is a circumstance of great moment. Forbes.

SA'BATISM. n. f. [from sabbatum, Lat.] Observance of the sabbath superstitiously rigid.

SA'LINE. n. f. [from saline, Fr. salina, Lat.] A plant.

Sabine or salin will make fine hedges, and may be brought into any form by clipping, much beyond trees. Mortimer.

SA'BLE. n. f. [from sabella, Lat.] Fur.

Sable is worn of great personages, and brought out of Russia, being the fur of a little beast of that name, esteemed for the perfectness of the colour of the hairs, which are very black. Hence sable, in heraldry, signifies the black colour in gentlemen's arms. Pieriam on Blazoning.
Furiously running in upon him, with tumultuous speech, he violently caught from his head his rich top of sables. Kroll's.

The peaceable plumes thy tackle must not fail,
Nor the dear purchase of the sable's tail. Cay.

SA'BLE. adj. [Fr.] Black. A word used by heralds and poets.

By this the drooping daylight 'gan to fade,
And yield her room to sad succeeding night,
Who with her sable mantle 'gan to shade
The face of earth, and ways of living wight.

With him inthron'd
Sat sable vested night, eldest of things,
The consort of his reign. Milt. Par. Lost.

They soon begin that tragick play,
And with their smoky cannons banish day:
Night, horrors, slaughter, with confusion meet,
And in their sable arms embrace the fleet.

Adoring first the genius of the place,
And night, and all the stars that gild her sable throne. Dryden.

SA'BLIERE. n. f. [French.]

1. A sandpit. Bailey

2. [In carpentry] A piece of timber as long, but not so thick, as a beam. Bailey.

SA'BRE. n. f. [from sabre, Fr. I suppose, of Turkish original.] A cymetar; a short sword with a convex edge; a falchion.

To me the cries of fighting fields are charms;
Keen be my sabre, and of proof my arms;
I ask no other blessing of my fate,
No prize but fame, no mistress but the wars.

Scam'd o'er with wounds, which his own
sabre gave,
In the vile habit of a village squire,
The fox deceiv'd. Pope's Odyssey.

SA'CCHARINE. adj. [from saccharum, Lat.] Having the taste, or any other of the chief qualities of sugar.

Manna is an essential saccharine salt, sweating from the leaves of most plants.

SACERDOTAL. adj. [from sacerdotalis, Lat.] Priestly; belonging to the priesthood.

They have several offices and prayers, especially for the dead, in which functions they use sacerdotal garments. Stillington.

He fell violently upon me, without respect to my sacerdotal orders. Dryden: Spanish Fryar.

If ample powers, granted by the rulers of this world, add dignity to the persons intrusted with these power, behold the importance and extent of the sacerdotal commission. Atterbury.

SA'CHEL. n. f. [from sacculus, Lat.] A small sack or bag.

SACK. n. f. [from Hebrew; saknos, Greek; saccus, Lat. sac, Sax. It is observable of this word, that it is found in all languages, and it is therefore conceived to be antediluvian.]

1. A bag; a pouch; commonly a large bag.

Our sacks shall be a mean to sack the city,
And we be lords and rulers over Roan.

Vastus caused the authors of that mutiny to be thrust into sacks, and in the sight of the fleet cast into the sea. Knolles.

2. The measure of three bushels.

3. A woman's loose robe.

To SACK v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put in bags.

Now the great work is done, the corn is ground,
The sack is sack'd, and ev'ry sack well bound.

2. [From sacar, Spanish.] To take by storm; to pillage; to plunder.

Edward Bruce spoiled all the old English pale inhabitants, and sack'd and rased all cities and corporate towns. Spenser.
I'll make thee stoop and bend thy knee,
Or sack this country with a mutiny.

What armies conquer'd, perish'd with thy sword?
What cities sack'd? Fairfax.

Who sees these dismal heaps, but would demand
What barbarous savager sack'd the land? Dryden.

The pope himself was ever after unfortunate,
Rome being twice taken and sack'd in his reign.

The great magazine for all kinds of treasure is the bed of the Tiber: when the Romans lay under the apprehensions of seeing their city sack'd by a barbarous enemy, they would take care to bestow such of their riches this way as could best bear the water.

The great magazine for all kinds of treasure is the bed of the Tiber: when the Romans lay under the apprehensions of seeing their city sack'd by a barbarous enemy, they would take care to bestow such of their riches this way as could best bear the water.

1. An oath; any ceremony producing an obligation.

2. An outward and visible sign of an inward and spiritual grace.

*As often as we mention a sacrament, it is improperly understood; for in the writings of the ancient fathers all articles which are peculiar to Christian faith, all duties of religion containing that which sense or natural reason cannot of itself discern, are most commonly named sacraments; our retention of the word to some few principal divine ceremonies, importeth in every such ceremony, the substance of the ceremony itself, which is visible; and besides that, some what else more secret, in reference whereunto we conceive that ceremony to be a sacrament.Hooker.The eucharist; the holy communion
Ten thousand French have taken the sacrament
To give their dangerous artillery
Upon so Christian soul but English Talbot.Shakespeare. Hen. VI.As we have taken the sacrament,

SALLOW. n. f. [salix, Latin] A tree of the genus of willow.

Sallows and reeds on banks of rivers born,

Remun to cut to stay thy vines. Dryden.

SALLOW. adj. [sala German, black; salt, French, foul.] Sickly; yellow.

What a deal of brine

Hath wait thy sallow cheeks for Rosaline?

Shakespeare.

The scene of beauty and delight is changed:

No rose bloom upon my sallow cheek,

Nor laughing graces wanton in my eyes;

But haggard truth, lean looking sallow care,

And grim discontent, a cruel train,

Dwell on my brow, all hideous and forlorn. Boyle.

SALLOWNESS. n. f. [from sallow.] Yellowness; sickly paleness.

A rich diet would give such sallowness to the celebrated beauties of this island, as would scarce make them distinguishable from those of France. Addison.

SALLY. n. f. [sallic, French.]

1. Eruption; issue from a place besieged; quick egress.

The deputy sat down before the town for the space of three winter months, during which time sallys were made by the Spaniards, but they were beaten in with loss. Bacon.

2. Range; excursion.

Love to our citadel resorts

Through those deceitful sallyports;

Our sentiments betray our forts. Dryden.

SALMAGUNDI. n. f. [It is said to be corrupted from selon mon goût, or sala mon goût.] A mixture of chopped meat and pickled herrings with oil, vinegar, pepper, and onions.

SALMON. n. f. [salmo, Latin; saumon, French.]

The salmon is accounted the king of fresh water fish, and is bred in rivers relating to the sea, yet so far from it as admits no mixture of brackishness. He is said to cast his spawn in August: some say that then they dig a hole in a safe place in the gravel, and there place their eggs or spawn, after the mother has done his natural office, and then cover it over with gravel and stones, and so leave it to their Creator's protection; who, by a gentle heat which he infuses into that cold element, makes it brood and beget life in the spawn, and to become famlets early in the Spring: they haste to the sea before Winter, both the mother and spawner.—Sir Francis Bacon observes the age of a salmon exceeds not ten years. After he is got into the sea he becomes from a famlet, not so big as a gudgeon, to be a salmon, in as short a time as a gosling becomes a goose. Walton's Angler.

They spoke them with an instrument somewhat like the salmon spear. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

They take salmon and trouts by groping and tickling them under the bellies in the pools, where they hover, and so throw them on land. Carew.

Salisfy, or the common sort of goathead, is of a very long oval figure, as if it were cuds all over streaked, and engraven in the spaces between the streaks, which are sharp pointed towards the end. Mortimer's Husbandry.

SALSOACID. adj. [sallus and acidus, Latin.] Having a taste compounded of saltiness and sourness.

The salsoacids help its passing off; as sal prunel. Floyer.

SALISUGINOUS. adj. [salugo, Lat.] Salus; somewhat salt.

The distinction of salts, whereby they are discriminated into acid, volatile, or saluginous, if I may so call the fugitive salts of animal substances, and fixed or alkalize, may appear of much use in natural philosophy. Boyle.

SALT. n. f. [salt, Gothick; sealt, Saxon; sal, Latin; sel, French.]

1. Salt is a body whose two essential properties seem to be, dissolubility in water, and a pungent sapor: it is an active incombustible substance: it gives all bodies consistence, and preserves them from corruption, and occasions all the variety of tastes. There are three kinds of salts, fixed, volatile, and essential; fixed salt is drawn by calcining the matter, then boiling the ashes in a good deal of water: after this the solution is filtrated, and all the moisture evaporated, when the salt remains in a dry form at the bottom: this is called a fixitious salt. Volatile salt is that drawn chiefly from the parts of animals, and some putrified parts of vegetables: it rises easily, and is the most volatile of any. The essential salt is drawn from the juice of plants by crystallization. Harris.

Is not discourse, manhood, learning, gentleness, virtue and liberality, the spice and salt that seasons a man. Shakespeare.

He perfidiously has given us—

For certain drops of salt, your city Rome,

To his wife and in other. Shakespeare.

Since salts differ much, some being fix, some volatile, some acid, and some urinous, the two qualities wherein they agree are, that it is easily dissoluble in water, and affects the palate with a vapour, good or evil. Boyle.

A particle of salt may be compared to a chaos, being dense, hard, dry, and earthy in the centre, and rare, soft, and moist in the circumference. Newton's Optics.

Salts are bodies friable and brittle, in some degree pellucid, sharp, or pungent to the taste, and dissoluble in water; but after that is evaporated, incorporating, crystallizing, and forming themselves into angular figures. Woodward.

2. Taste; smack.

Though we are justices and doctors, and churchmen, Mr. Page, we have some salt of our youth in us; we are the sons of women. Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.

3. Wit; merriment.

SALT. adj.

1. Having the taste of salt; as, salt fish.

We were better parch in Africk sun,
Than in the pride and salt scorn of his eyes. Shakespeare.

Thou old and true Menenius,

Thy tears are *salt*er than a young man's,

And venomous to thine eyes. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

2. Impregnated with salt.

Hang him, mechanical salt butter rogue; I will awe him with my cudgel. Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.

It hath been observed by the ancients, that salt water will dissolve salt put into it in less time than fresh water. Bacon.

A leap into salt waters very often gives a new motion to the spirits, and a new turn to the blood. Addison.

In Cheshire they improve their lands by letting out the water of the salt springs on them, always after rain. Mortimer.

3. Abounding with salt.

He shall inhabit the parched places in the wilderness in a salt land, and not inhabited. Jer. xvii. 6.

4. [Salax, Lat.] Lecherous; salacious.

Be a whore still:

Make use of thy salt hours, season the slaves
For tubs and baths; bring down the rosecheek'd youth

To the tub-salt, and the dirt. Shakespeare. Timon.

All the charms of love,

Salt Cleopatra, soften thy wan lip! Shakespeare.

This new-married man, approaching here,

Whose salt imagination yet hath wrong'd

Your well-defended honour, you must pardon. Shakespeare.

Latin.]

1. The act of confirmation which gives to any thing its obligatory power; ratification.

I have kill'd a slave,
And of his blood could to be mix'd with wine:
Fill every man his bowl. There cannot be A fitter drink to make this sanction in. B. n. Jor.
Against the publick sanctions of the place,
With sates averry, the rout in arms return,
To force their monarch. Dryden's Ann.
There needs no political law or sanction of God to stamp an obliquity upon such a disobedience.

By the laws of men, enacted by civil power, gratitude is not enforced; that is, not enjoined by the sanction of penalties, to be inflicted upon the person that shall not be found grateful. South.
The satisfactions of the Christian life, in its present practice and future hopes, are not the mere raptures of enthusiasm, as the strictest professors of reason have added the sanction of their testimony. Watts.

This word is often made the sanction of an oath: it is reckoned a great commendation to be a man of honour. Swift.

Wanting sanction and authority, it is only yet a private work. Baker on Learning.

2. A law; a decree ratified. Improper.

'Tis the first sanction nature gave to man,
Each other to assist in what they can. Denham.

SANCTITUDE n. f. [from sanctus, Lat.]

At his touch,
Such sanctity hath Heaven given his hand,
They presently amend. Shakespeare.

God attributes to place

No sanctity, if none be thither brought
By men who there frequent. Milton.

2. Goodness; the quality of being good;

purity; godliness.

This youth

I reliev'd with such sanctity of love,
And to his image, which methought did promise
Most venerable worth, did I devotion. Shakespeare.

It was an observation of the ancient Romans, that their empire had not more increased by the strength of their arms than the sanctity of their manners. Addison.

3. Saint; holy being.

About him all the sanctities of heav'n
Stood thick as flues, and from his light receiv'd Beatitude past utterance. Milton.

There I'll rake up, the post unsanctified. Shakespeare.

Hark, the fatal followers do pursue!

The sands are number'd that make up my life:
Here must I stay, and here my life must end.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Sand hath always its root in clay, and there he no veins of sand any great depth within the earth. Bacon.

Calling for more paper to describe, king Philip shew'd him the difference betwixt the ink box and sand box. Horvel.

If quicksilver be put into a convenient glass vessel, and that vessel exactly stopp'd, and kept for ten weeks in a sand furnace, whose heat may be constant, the corpuscles that constitute the quicksilver will, after innumerable revolutions, be so connected to one another, that they will appear in the form of a red powder. Boyle.

Engag'd with money bags, as bold

As men with land bags did of old. Hudibras.

The force of sand casts gold out from the bowels of mountains, and exposes it among the sands of rivers. Dryden.

Shells are found in the great sand pit at Wool-wich. Woodward.

Celia and I, the other day,
Walk'd o'er the sand hills to the sea. Prior.

So, where our wild Nunidian wastes extend,
Sudden th' impetuous hurricane descend,
Wheel through the air, in circling eddies play,
Tear up the sands, and sweep whole plains away

The helpless traveller, with wild surprise,
Sees the dry desert all around him rise,
And smother'd in the dusty whirlwind dies. Adrian.

SANDAL n. f. [sandale, Fr. sandalium, Latin.] A loose shoe.

Thus sung the uncouth swain to th' oaks and rills,

While still the morn went out with sandal's grey. Milton.

From his robe

Flows light ineffable: his harp, his quiver,
And L. can bow are gold: with golden sandals
His feet are shod. Prior.

The sandals of celestial mold, Fledg'd with ambrosial plumes, and rich with

The next they sang, of all creation first Mith.
SANGUIFEROUS adj. [sanguifer, Latin.] Conveying blood.

The fifth conjugation of the nerves is branched to the muscles of the face, particularly the cheeks, whose sanguiferous vessels it twines about. Dehman's Physi. Theory

SANGUIFICATION. n. f. [sanguification, Fr. sanguis and factio, Lat.] The production of blood; the conversion of the chyle into blood.

Since the lungs are the chief instrument of sanguification, the animal that has that organ faulty cannot yet have the vital juices, derived from the blood, in a good state. Arbutnot.

Altimack passions have voracious appetites, and consume, for want of a right sanguification, an leucopragmatic. Arbutnot.

SANGUIFICATOR. n. f. [sanguis and factio, Latin.] Producer of blood.

Bitter like cholera, and the sanguifactor, and all the other butters. Flavon in the H. mours

TO SANGUIFY. v. n. [sanguis and factio, Lat.] To produce blood.

At the same time I think, I command in interior faculty, I walk, see, hear, digest, sanguify and carnify, by the power of an individual soul. Hale.

SANGUINARY, adj. [sanguinarius, Latin.] Cruel; bloody; murderous.

We may not propagate religion by wars, or by sanguinary persecution to force conscience. Bacon.

The scene is now more sanguinary, and fuller of action, never was such a confused mysterious civil war as this. Howell.

Passion transforms us into a kind of savage, and makes us brutal and sanguinary. Brown.

SANGUINARY. n. f. [sanguis, Lat.] An herb. Arbutnot.

SANGUINE. adj. [sanguis, Fr. sanguineus, from sanguis, Lat.]

1. Red, having the colour of blood.

This flow
Upbraide me about the red I wear,
Sanguis, the sanguis colour of the leaves
Did represent my master's blushing cheeks. St. Augustine.

A stream of neck'rous humour issuing flow'd
Sanguis. Milton.

Diré 'tisiphone there keeps the ward,
Girt in her sanguine gown. Dryden.

Her flag alit, spread rustling to the wind,
And sanguine flames from the flood to fire
The weaver, charm'd with what his loom delign'd, Dryd.

2. Abounding with blood more than any other humour, cheerful.

The chol'rick tell short of the longevity of the sanguine. Brown.

Though these faults differ in their complexions as sanguine from melancholy, yet they are frequently united. Grove of To.

3. Warm; ardent; confident.

A sanguine temper is liable, in the number of fopperies, all such apprehensions. Swift.

SANGUINE. n. f. [sanguis, Lat.] Blood colour.

A grievous wound,
From which forth gush'd a stream of gore, blood thick,
That all her gold'ly garments stain'd around,
And in deep sanguine dy'd the grassy ground. Fairy Queen.

SANGUINENESS. n. f. [sanguine, Lat.]

SANGUINITY. n. f. [sanguine, Lat.] Ardour, heat of expectation; confidence. Sanguinity is perhaps only used by Swift.

Kings, or plenty it may be, in some perhaps natural courage, or sanguine of temper in others; but true valour it is not, if it knows not as well to suffer as to do. That mind is truly great, and only that, which stands above the power of all extrinick violence; which keeps itself a distinct principality, independent upon the outward man. Deity of Piety.

I very much distrust your sanguinity. Swift.

SANGUINEOUS. adj. [sanguineus, Latin.]

1. Constituting blood.

This animal of Plato containeth not only sanguineus and reproducible particles, but is made up of veins, nerves, and arteries. Brown.

2. Abounding with blood.

A plethorick constitution, in which true blood abounds, is called sanguineus. Arbutnot.

SANHEDRIM. n. f. [synedrium, Latin.]

The chief council among the Jews, consisting of seventy elders, over whom the high-priest presided.

SANICLE. n. f. [sanicle, Fr. sanicula, Lat.] A plant.

SANITY. n. f. [sanitas, Lat.] Soundness of mind.

It began with a round crack in the skin, without other matter in a little sanicle. Wiseham.

SANIOUS. adj. [sanies, Latin.] Running a thin ferous matter, not a well-digested pas.

Observing the old sanies I proposed digestion as the only way to remove the pain. Wiseham.

SANITY. n. f. [sanitas, Lat.] Soundness of mind.

How pregnant, sometimes, his replies are! A happy is that often madmen hits on, Which sanity and reason could not be.

So prosperously delivered of. Shakspeare. Hamlet.

SANK. The preterite of sink.

As it the opening of her mouth to Zelmane hid up and some great floodgate of sorrow, whereof her heart could not abide the violent issue, she sank to the ground. Sidney.

Our men to loved them close, took two ships, and gave divers others of their ships their death's wounds, whereof soon after they sank and perished. Bacon's War with Spain.

SANS. prep. [French.] Without. Out of use.

Last scene of all,
That ends this strange eventful history,
Is second childishness and mere oblivion,
Sans teeth, sans eyes, sans taste, sans every thing. Shakspeare.

For nature so preposterously to err,
Being not deficient, blind, or lame of sense,
Sans witchcraft could not. Shakspeare. Orlando.

SAP. n. f. [sapere, Saxon; sif, Dutch.]

The vital juice of plants; the juice that circulates in trees and herbs.

Now sucking of the sap of herbs most sweet,
Or of the dew, which yet on them does lie,
Now in the same bathing his tender feet. Spenser.

Though now this grained face of mine be hid
In sap consuming Winter's drizzled snow,
And all the conduits of my blood froze up,
Yet hath my night of life some memory. Shakspeare.

Wound the bark of our iust trees,
Left, being over-proud with sap and blood,
With too much riches it confound itself. Shakspeare.

His presence had infused
Into the plant scientific sap. Milton.

The sap which at the roots is bred
In trees, through all the boughs is spread. Wall.
Vegetables consist of the same parts with animal substances, spirit, water, salt, oil, earth; all which are contained in the sap they derive from the earth. Arbutnot.

TO SAP. v. a. [sapper, Fr. sappare, Ital.]

To under-mine; to subvert by digging; to mine.

Their dwellings were sapp'd by floods,
Then houses fell upon their household gods. Dryden.

TO SAP. v. n. To proceed by mine; to proceed invisibly.

For the better security of the troops, both assaults are carried on by sapping. Tattler.

In vain may heroes fight, and patriots rave,
If secret gold saps on from knave to knave. Pope.

SAPPHIRE. n. f. [sapphirus, Latin: so that it is improperly written saphyre.]

A precious stone of a blue colour.

Sapphire is of a bright blue colour. Woodward.
In enrold'd tufts, flowers purified, blue and white,

Like sapphire, pearl, in rich embroidery. Slack.
He tinctures rubies with their rosy hue,
And on the sapphire spreads a heavenly blue. Blackmore.

That the sapphire should grow fruit, and lose its beauty, when worn by one that is lecherous, and many other fabulous stories of gems, are great arguments that their value is equivalent to their value. Derham.

SAPPHIRINE. adj. [sapphirinus, Latin.]

Made of sapphire; resembling sapphire.
She was too sapphirine and clear for thee;
Clay, flint, and jet now thy sit dwellings be. Donne.

A few grains of shell silver, with a convenient proportion of powdered crystal glass, having been kept three hours in fusion, I found the coliquated mass, upon breaking the crucible, of a lovely sapphirine blue. Boyle.

SAPID. adj. [sapidus, Lat.] Tastesful; palatable; making a powerful stimulation upon the palate.

Thus camels, to make the water sapid, do raise the mud with their feet. Brown.

The most oily parts are not separated by a slight decoction, till they are disentangled from the salts, for if what remains of the subject, after the infusion and decoction be continued to be boiled down with the addition of fresh water, a fat, sapid, odorous, viscous, inflammable, frothy water will constantly be found floating atop of the boiling liquor. Arbutnot.

SAPIDITY. n. f. [sapidus, Lat.] Taste-

SAPIDNESS. n. f. [sapidus, Lat.] Tastefulness, power of stimulating the palate.

As for their taste, if their nutriment be air, neither can it be an instrument thereof; for the body of that element is ingutible, and void of all sapidity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

If sapidness belong not to the mercurial principle of vegetables and animals it will scarce be discriminated from their phlegm. Boyle.

SAPIENCE. n. f. [sapientia, Fr. sapientia, Lat.] Wisdom; sagacity; knowledge.

By sapientia, I mean what the ancients did by philosophy; the habit or disposition of mind which importeth the love of wisdom. Grew.

Not only they that dwell in lowly dust,
The sons of darkness and of ignorance;
But they whom thou, great Jove, by doom unjust,

Didst fit to the top of honour earth advance;
They now, put up with a deignful infelence,
Despise the broad or blessed sapientia. Spenser.

King James, of immortal memory, among all the lovers and admirers of divine and human

Es. sapientia.

sapience, accomplished at Theobald's his own da. on earth. W. Hall.

Because enterprizes guided by ill counsel have equal success to those by the best judgment conducted, therefore had violence the timeliest figure with sapience. Raleigh.

Sapient and love
Immensely, and all his father in him shone. Milt.
O sovereign, virtuous, precious of all trees
In Paradise of operation blest
To sapience. Milton.

Many a wretch in Bedlam,
Though perhaps among the rout
He wildly flings his filth about,
Still has gratitude and sapience,
To praise the folks that give him hap-pence. Swift.
SAP'IENT. adj. [sapiens, Latin.] Wise; sage.

There the sapient king held dalliance. Milton.
SAP'PLESS. adj. [saploos, Dutch.]

1. Wanting sap; wanting vital juice.
Pithless arms, like to a wither'd vine,
That droops his sapless branches to the ground. Shakespeare.

The tree of knowledge, blasted by disputes,
Produces sapless leaves instead of fruits. Denham.

This single stick was full of sap; but now in vain does art tie that withered bundle of twigs to its sapless trunk. Swift.

2. Dry; old; husky.
If by this bribe, well plac'd, he would ensnare
Some sapless usurer that wants an heir. Dryden.
SAP'PLING. n. f. [from sap.] A young tree; a young plant.

Look how I am bewitch'd; behold, mine arm
Is, like a blasted sapling, wither'd up. Shakespeare.
Nurse the saplings tall, and curl the grove
With ringlets quaint. Milton.

A sapling pine he wrench'd from out the ground,

The readiest weapon that his fury found. Dryden.

What planter will attempt to yoke
A sapling with a falling oak? Swift.
Slouch turn'd his head, saw his wife's vigorous hand

Wielding her oaken sapling of command. King.
SAPONACEOUS. adj. [from sapo, Latin,
SAPONARY. s. soap.] Sopy; resembling soap; having the qualities of soap.

By digesting a solution of salt of tartar with oil of almonds, I could reduce them to a soft saponary substance. Boyle.

Any mixture of an oily substance with salt, may be called a soap: bodies of this nature are called saponaceous. Ambroise.

SAP'OR. n. f. [Latin.] Taste; power of affecting or stimulating the palate.

There is some sapor in all aliment, as being to be distinguished and judged by the gust, which cannot be admitted in air. Brown.

The shape of those little particles of matter which distinguish the various sapors, odours, and colours of bodies. Warren.

or the quality of abounding in sap; succulence; juiciness.

SAP'PY. adj. [from sap.]

1. Abounding in sap; juicy; succulent.
The sappy parts, and next resembling juice,
Were turn'd to moisture for the body's use,
Supplying humours, blood, and nourishment. Dryden.

The sappy boughs
Attire themselves with blooms, sweet rudiment
Of future harvest. Philips.

The green heat the ripe, and the ripe give fire to the green; to which the bigness of their leaves, and hardness of their stalks, which continue moist and sappy long, doth much contribute. Martini.

2. Young; not firm; weak.

This young prince was brought up among nurses, till he arrived to the age of six years:
when he had passed this weak and sappy age, he was committed to Dr. Cox. Hayward.

SARABAND. n. f. [sarabande, Spanish;
sarabande, French.] A Spanish dance.

The several modifications of this tune-playing quality in a fiddle, to play preludes, sara-bands, jigs, and gavots, are as much real qualities in the instrument as the thought is in the mind of the composer. Abraham and Pope.

SAR'CAISM. n. f. [sarcasme, Fr. sarcasmus, Lat.] A keen reproach; a taunt;
a gibe.

Sarcasms of wit are transmitted in story.

Rejoice, O young man, says Solomon, in a fewer sarcasms, in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thy heart; but know that for these things God will bring thee into judgment. Rogers's Sermons.

When an angry master says to his servant, It is bravely done, it is one way of giving a severe reproach; for the words are spoken by way of sarcasm, or irony. Watts.

SARCASTICALLY. adv. [from sarcastick.]
Tauntingly; severely.

He asked a lady playing with a lap-dog, whether the women of that country used to have any children or no? thereby sarcastically re-proaching them for misplacing that affection upon brutes, which could only become a mother to her child. Soub.

SARCASTICAL. adj. [from sarcasm.]
SARCASTICK. adj. Keen; taunting; severe.

What a fierce and sarcastick apprehension would this have drawn from the friendship of the world, and yet what a gentle one did it receive from Christ? Soub.

SARCFNET. n. f. [Supposed by Skinner to be sericum saracenicum, Lat.] Fine thin woven silk.

Why art thou then exasperate, thou idle im-material skin of fly'd net, thou given sericeous flap for a lone eye, thou tangle of a prodigious puise? Stables, Trullius and Crispin.

If they be weak, though but with linen or sarcnet, it accepts the effluvia. Brown.

These are they that cannot bear the heat
Of sarcnet filks, and under sarcnets sweat. Dryden.

She darts from sarcnet ambush wily looks,
Twitches thy sleeve, or with familiar airs
Her fan will pat the cheek; these snare dis-train. Gay.

TO SAR'CLE. v. a. [sarcler, Fr. sarculo, Lat.] To weed corn. Ainsworth.

SARCOCELE. n. f. [sarx and cele; sarcocele, Fr.] A fleshy excrescence of the Flesh-eating; feeding on flesh.

SARCO'PHAGY. n. f. [sarx and phagō.] The practice of eating flesh.

There was no sarcophagy before the flood, and, without the eating of flesh, our fathers preserved their selves unto longer lives than their posterity. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

SARCO'TICK. n. f. [from sarx; sar cotique, Fr.] Medicines which fill up ulcers with new flesh; the same as incarnatives.

The humour was moderately repressed, and breathed forth; after which the ulcer incarnated with common sarcolics, and the ulcerations about it were cured by ointment of tury. Wijman.

SARCU'LATIION. n. f. [sarculus, Latin.]
The act of weeding; plucking up weeds.
Dict.

SAR'DET. n. f. A sort of precious
SAR'DINE Stone. n. f. A sort of precious SAR'DIUS. n. f. A sort of precious stone.

He that sat was to look upon, like a jasper and a sardine stone. Rev. iv. 3.

Thou shalt sit in it four rows of stones; the first row shall be a sardius. Exod. xxviii. 17.

SAR'DONYX. n. f. A precious stone.

The onyx is an accidental variety of the agat kind: 'tis of a dark horny colour, in which is a plate of a bluish white, and sometimes of red;
when on one or both sides the white there happens to lie also a plate of a reddish colour, the jewellers call the stone a sardonyx. Woodward.

SARK. n. f. [scrynk, Saxon.]

through a sieve or sieve. Bailey.

SART. n. f. [In agriculture.] A piece of woodland turned into arable. Bailey.

SASH. n. f. [Of this word the etymolo-gists give no account: I suppose it comes from sache, of savoir, to know, a sash worn being a mark of distinction; and a sash window being made particularly for the sake of seeing and being seen.]

1. A belt worn by way of distinction; a silken band worn by officers in the army.
2. A window so formed as to be let up and down by pulleys

She ventures now to lift the sash;
The window is her proper sphere. Swift.

looked into the yard. Swift.

SASHOON. n. f. A kind of leather stuffing put into a boot for the wearer's ease.

SASSAFRAS. n. f. A tree. The wood is medicinal.

SAT. The preterite of sit.

The picture of fair Venus, that
For which, men say, the goddess sat,
Was lost, 'till Lely from your look Again that glorious image took. Waller.

I answered not the Rehearsal, because I knew the author sat to himself when he drew the picture, and was the very Bays of his own face. Dryden.

SAT'ICHEL. n. f. [sackel, German: sacculus, Latin. Perhaps better sackel.]
A little bag: commonly a bag used by school-boys to carry their books.

The whining schoolboy with his satibel,
And shining morning face, creeping like snail Unwilt.

Unwillingly to school. Shakspeare. As you like it.
School-boy, lag with saturns in their hands.

Swift.

TO SATIATE. v. a. [satio, Latin.] To satiate; to glut; to pall; to feed beyond natural desires.

Sated at length, ere long I might perceive Strange alteration in me. Milton's Paradise Lost.

How will their bodies script
Enrich the victors, while the vultures sate
'Their maws with full repast? Phillips.

Thy useless strength, mistaken king, employ,
Sated with rage, and ignorant of joy. Prior.

SAT'ELLITE. n. f. [satelles, Lat. satellit, Fr.] This word is commonly pronounced in prose with the e mute in the plural, as in the singular, and is therefore only of three syllables; but Pope has in the plural continued the Latin form, and assigned it four; I think, improperly.] A small planet revolving round a larger.

Four moons move about Jupiter, and five about Saturn, called their satellites. Locke.

The smallest planets are situated nearest the sun and each other; whereas Jupiter and Saturn, that are vastly greater, and have many satellites about them, are widely removed to the extreme regions of the system. Bentley.

Ask of yonder argent fields above,
Why Jove's satellites are less than Jove? Pope.

SATELLITIOUS. adj. [from satelles, Lat.] Consisting of satellites.

Then solidity and opacity and their satellitious attendance, their revolutions about the sun, and their rotations about their axis, are exactly the same. Cibyn's Phil. Prin.

TO SATIATE. v. a. [satio, Latin.]

1. To satisfy; to fill.

Those smells are the most grateful where the degree of heat is small, or the strength of the smell allayed; for these rather woo the sense than saturate it. Bacon.

Buying of land is the result of a full and saturated gun; and men in trade seldom think of laying out their money upon land, till their profit has brought them in more than their trade can well employ. Locke.

The loosen'd winds
Hurl'd high above the clouds, till all their force Consum'd, her ravenous jaws the earth saturate
close'd. Phillips.

2. To glut; to pall; to fill beyond natural desire.

Whatever novelty presents, children are presently eager to have a taste, and are as soon saturated with it. Locke.

He may be satiated, but not satiated. Norris.

3. To gratify desire.

I may yet survive the malice of my enemies, although they should be satiated with my blood. King Charles.

4. To saturate; to impregnate with as much as can be contained or imbibed.

Why does not salt of tutar draw more water out of the air, than in a certain proportion to its quantity, but for want of an attractive force after it is saturated with water? Newton.

SATIATED. adj. [from the verb.] Glutted; full to satiety. When it has with, it seems a participle; when of, an adjective.

Our general, retir'd to their estates,
In life's cool evening, satiated of applause,
Nor think of bleeding even in Brunswick's cause. Pope.

Now may'rs and shrieves all hush'd and satiated
lay,
Yet eat, in dreams, the custard of the day. Pope.

SATIETY. n. f. [satietas, Latin; satiété, Fr.] Fulness beyond desire or pleasure;

more than enough; wearisomeness of plenty; state of being palled or glutted.

He leaves a shallow plash to plunge him in the deep,

And with satiety seeks to quench his thirst. Shakspeare.
Nothing more jealous than a favourite, especially towards the waining-time and lustre of satiety. Wotton.

In all pleasures there is satiety; and after they be used, their verdure departeth. Hakewill.

They satiate and soon fill,
Though pleasant; but thy words, with grace divine

Imbu'd, bring to their sweetness no satiety. Milt.
No action, the usefulness of which has made it the matter of duty, but a man may bear the continual pursuit of, without loathing or satiety. South.

The joy unequal'd, if its end it gain,
Without satiety, though e'er so blest,
And but more relish'd as the more distress'd. Pope.

SAT'IN. n. f. [satén, French; drapo de setan, Italian; satijn, Dutch.] A soft close and shining silk.

Upon her body she wore a doublet of sky-colour satén, covered with plates of gold, and as it were nailed with precious stones, that in it she might seem armed. Sidney.

The ladies dress'd in rich fymars were seen,
Of Florence satén, flower'd with white and green,
And for a shade betwixt the bloomy gridelin. Dryden.

Her petticoat, transform'd apace,
Became black satén, flounc'd with lace. Swift.

Lay the child carefully in a case, covered with a mantle of blue satén. Asbutnot and Pope.

SAT'IRE. n. f. [satira, anciently satura, Lat. not from satyrus, a satyr; satire, Fr.] A poem in which wickedness or folly is censured, Proper satire is distinguished, by the generality of the reflections, from a lampoon which is aimed against a particular person; but they are too frequently confounded: it has on before the subject.

He dares to sing thy praises in a clime
Where vice triumphs, and virtue is a crime;
Where ev'n to draw the picture of thy mind,
Is satyr on the most of human kind. Dryden.

My verse is satire, Dorset lend your ear,
And patronise a muse you cannot fear. Young.

SAT'IRICAL. adj. [satiricus, Latin; satirique, French; from satire.]

1. Belonging to satire; employed in writing of invective.

You must not think, that a satirick style
Allows of scandalous and brutish words. Roscom.

What human kind desires, and what they shun,
Rage, passions, pleasures, impotence of will,
Shall the satirical collection fill. Dryden's Juvenal.

2. Censorious; severe in language.

Sland'ring air; for the satirical slave says here, that old men have grey beards; that their faces are wrinkled. Shakspeare.

He that hath a satirical vein, as he maketh others afraid of his wit, so he had need be afraid of his memory. Bacon.

Some when dunces are satirick,
I take it for a panegyrick. Swift.

SAT'IRICALLY. adv. [from satirical.] With invective; with intention to censure or vilify.

He applies them satirically to some customs, and kinds of philosophy, which he arraigns. Dryden.

SAT'IRIST. n. f. [from satire.] One who writes satires.

I first adventure, follow me who list,
And be the second English satirist, Hall.
Wycherly, in his writings, is the sharpest

satirist of his times; but, in his nature, he has the instincts of the tenderest disposition, such writings he is severe, bold, undaunting, in his nature gentle, modest, inoffensive. Grasshoff.

All vain pretenders have been constantly the topics of the most candid satirists, from the Cedrus of Juvenal to the Damon of Boileau. Glard.

SA'VOURY. adj. [savoureux, Fr. from saug.]

1. Pleasing to the smell.

The pleasant savoury smell
So quicken'd appetite, that I Could not but taste! Milton's Par. Lost.

From the boughs a savoury odour blown,
Grateful to appetite! more pleas'd my sense
Than smell of sweetest fennel, or the taste
Of ewe, or goat, dropping with milk. Id.

2. Piquant to the taste.

Savoury meat, such as my father loveth,
The savoury pulp they chew. Milton.

SA'VOY. n. f. [bragata sabaudica, Lat.] A sort of cowwort.

SA'VAGE. n. f. [savage, Fr. savage, Lat.]

A roll or ball made commonly of pork or veal, and sometimes of beef, minced very small, with fat and spice; sometimes it is stuffed into the guts of fowls, and sometimes only rolled in flour.

SAW. The preterite of see.

I never saw 'till now Sight more detestable. Milton.

SAW. n. f. [saw, Danish; zage, or zize, Saxon; scia, French.]

1. A dentated instrument, by the attrition of which wood or metal is cut.

The teeth are filed to an angle, pointing towards the end of the saw, and not towards the handle of the saw, or straight between the handle and end: because the saw is designed to cut only in its progress forwards, a man having in that more strength than he can have in drawing back his saw, and therefore when he draws it back, he bears it lightly off the saw, which enables him the longer to continue his several progressions of the saw. Mason's Mech. Art.
The roach is a leather mouth'd fish, and has saw-like teeth in his throat. Walton's Angler.
Then saws were tooth'd, and sounding axes made. Dryd.

If they cannot cut,
His saw are toothless, and his hatchets lead. Pope.

2. [Saga, Saxon; saeghe, Dutch.] A saying; a maxim; a sentence; an axiom; a proverb.

Good king, that must approve the common saw:

Thou out of Heaven's benediction com'st
To the warm sun! Shakespeare's King Lear.

From the table of my memory
I'll wipe away all saws of books. Shakespeare.

His weapons, holy saws of sacred writ. Shak.

Strict age and four severity,
With their grave saws in slumber lie. Milton.

To SAW. part. sawed and sawn. [scier, Fr. from the noun.] To cut timber or other matter with a saw.

They were stoned, they were sawn aunder, H. brewer.

A carpenter after he hath sawn down a tree, and wrought it handsomely, sets it in a wall. W. J. xiii. 11.

Master workmen, when they direct any of their underlings, to saw a piece of stuff, have several phrases for the sawing of it: they seldom say, saw the piece of stuff; but, draw the saw through it; give the piece of stuff a kerf. Moxon.
It is an ineffectuality, from a swift motion, such as that of running, thrashing, or sawing. Ray on the Creation.

If I cut my finger, I shall as certainly feel pain as if my soul was co-extended with the limb, and had a piece of it sawn through. Collier.

SA'WDUST. n. f. [saw and dust.] Dust made by the attrition of the saw.

If the membrane be fouled by the sawdust of the bone, wipe it off with a sponge. Wise man.
Rotten sawdust, mixed with earth, enriches it very much. Mortimer's Husbandry.

SA'WFISH. n. f. [saw and fish.] A sort of fish with a kind of dentated horn.

SA'WPIT. n. f. [saw and pit.] Pit over which timber is laid to be sawn by two men.

Get them from forth a sawpit rash at once
With some diffused song. Shakespeare.

They colour it by laying it in a sawpit that has a saw and them. Mortimer's Husbandry.

SA'WYER. n. f. [serrata, Latin.] A plant like the greater centaury, from which this differs in having smaller heads, and from the knapweed, in having the borders edges of the leaves cut into small sharp segments, resembling the teeth of a saw.

SAW-WREST. n. f. [saw and wrest.] A sort of tool.

With the saw-wrest they fit the teeth of the saw; that is, they put one of the notches of the wrist between the first two teeth on the blade of the saw, and then turn the handle horizontally a little about upon the notch towards the end of the saw; and that piece turns the first tooth somewhat towards you, and the second tooth from you.

SA'WER. n. f. [saw, Fr. from saw.] One whose trade is to saw timber into boards or beams.

The pit-saw is used by joiners, when what they have to do may be as soon done at home as send it to the sawyers.

SA'XIFRAGE. n. f. [saxifraga, Fr. saxifraga, Latin.] A plant.

Saxifraga, quasi saxum frangere, to break the stone, is applicable to any thing having this property; but is a term most commonly given to a plant, from an opinion of its medicinal virtue to this effect.

SA'XIFRAGE, Meadow. n. f. [silanum, Lat.] A plant.

SA'XIFRAGOUS. adj. [saxum and frango, Latin.] Dissolvent of the stone.

Because goat's blood was found an excellent medicine for the stone, it might be conceived to be able to break a diamond; and so it came to be ordered that the goats should be fed on saxifragous herbs, and such as are conceived of power to break the stone.

TO SAY. v. a. preter. said [regan, Sax-on; seggen, Dutch.]

- 1. To speak; to utter in words; to tell.
Say it out, Diggon, whatever it light. Spenser.
To this slumby agitation what have you heard his say? Shak.
Speak unto Solomon; for he will not say thee nay. King.
Say nothing to any man, but go thy way. Mark.

- 2. To alledge by way of argument.

After all can be said against a thing, it will still be true, that many things, possibly are, which we know not of.

In vain shall we attempt to justify ourselves, as the rich young man in the gospel did, by appealing to the great duties of the law; unless we can say somewhat more, even than we have been liberal in our distributions to the poor.

- 3. To tell in any manner.

With flying speed, and seeming great pretence, Came messenger with letters which his message said.

- 4. To repeat; to rehearse: as, to say a part; to say a lesson.

- 5. To pronounce without singing.
Then shall be said or sung as follows.

TO SAY. v. n.

- 1. To speak; to pronounce; to utter; to relate.

He said moreover, I have somewhat to say unto thee; and the said, say on.

The council-table and ear-chamber hold, as Thucydides said of the Athenians, for honourable that which pleased, and for just that which profited.

The Lord here has taken his right measures, that is to say, he has made a true judgment.

Of some propositions it may be difficult to say whether they affirm or deny; as when we say, Plato was no fool.

- 2. In poetry, say is often used before a question; tell.

Say first what came Mov'd our grand parents to fall off?

Say, Stella, feel you no content,
Reflecting on a life well spent?

And who more blest, who chain'd his country;
Or he whose virtue fight'd to lose a day?

SAY. n. f. [from the verb.]

- 1. A speech; what one has to say.
He no sooner said out his say, but up rises a cunning snip.

- 2. [For essay.] Sample.

So good a say invites the eye,
A little downward to espy

The lively clusters of her breasts.
Since thy outside looks so fair and warlike,

And that thy tongue some say of breeding breathes,
By rule of knight-hood I disdain.

- 3. Trial by a sample.

This gentleman having brought that earth to the publick say masters, and upon their being unable to bring it to fusion, or make it fly away, he had procured a little of it, and with a peculiar flux separated a third part of pure gold.

- 4. [Sate, Fr.] Silk. Obsolete.

- 5. A kind of woollen stuff.

SAY'ING. n. f. [from say.] Expression; words; opinion sententiously delivered.

I thank thee, Brutus,
That thou hast prov'd Lucilius' saying true.

Moses died at this saying, and was a stranger in Midian.

Many are the sayings of the wife,
Extolling patience as the truest fortitude.

Oth'er try to divert the troubles of other men by pretty and plausible sayings, such as this, that if evils are long, they are but light.

We practick folks, who must restrain
Our measur'd sayings in an equal chain,
Have troubles utterly unknown to those,
Who let their fancy loose in rambling prose.

The sacred function can never be hurt by their sayings, if not first reproached by our doings.

SCAB. n. f. [scab, Saxon; scabbia, Italian; scabbe, Dutch; scabies, Latin.]

- 1. An incrustation formed over a sore by dried matter.

What's the matter, you dissentious rogues,
That rubbing the poor itch of your opinion,
Make yourselves scabs?

That free from gout thou may'st preserve thy care,
And clear from scabs produc'd by freezing air.

- 2. The itch or mange of horses.

- 3. A paltry fellow, so named from the itch often incident to negligent poverty.

I would thou did'st itch from head to foot, and I had the scratching of thee, I would make thee the loathsome'st scab in Greece.

Well said, Wart, thou art a good scab: there is a tetter for thee.

One of the usurers, a head man of the city, took it in dudgeon to be ranked, cheek by jowl, with a scab of a carrier.

This vap'ring scab must needs devise
To ape the thunder of the skies.

SCA'BEARD. n. f. [schap, German. Junius.] The sheath of a sword.

Enter Fortune's gate,
Nor in thy scabbard sheath that famous blade,

'Till thou be thy king long and state.

What eyes! how keen their glance! you do well to keep 'em well'd; they are too sharp to be trusted with the scabbard.

SCA'BRED. adj. [from scab.]

SCABBY. adj. [from scab.] Diseased with scabs.

Her writhled skin, as rough as mapple rind,
So scabby was, that would have loath'd all mankind.

A scabby tetter on their peltis will stick,
When the raw rain has pierc'd them to the quick.

If the grazer should bring me one wether fat and well fleeced, and expect the same price for a whole hundred, without giving me focus for to restore my money for those that were lean, thorn, or scabby, I would be none of his customers.

SCA'BREDS. n. f. [from scabbed.] The state of being scabby.

SCA'BRIENES. n. f. [from scabby.] The quality of being scabby.

SCABDY. adj. [from scab.] Diseased with scabs.

Her writhled skin, as rough as mapple rind,
So scabby was, that would have loath'd all mankind.

A scabby tetter on their peltis will stick,
When the raw rain has pierc'd them to the quick.

If the grazer should bring me one wether fat and well fleeced, and expect the same price for a whole hundred, without giving me focus for to restore my money for those that were lean, thorn, or scabby, I would be none of his customers.

SCA'BIOUS. adj. [scabiosus, Lat.] Itchy; leprous.

In the spring scabious eruptions upon the skin were epidemical, from the acidity of the blood.

SCA'BIOUS. n. f. [scabiose, Fr. scabiosa, Latin.] A plant.

SCA'BROUS. adj. [scabreus, Fr. scaber, Lat.]

- 1. Rough; rugged; pointed on the surface.
Urine, black and bloody, is occasioned by something sharp or scabrous wounding the small blood-vessels: if the stone is smooth and well bedded, this may not happen.

- 2. Harsh; unmusical.

Lucretius is scabrous and rough in these: he seeks them as some do Chaucerisms, which were better expunged.

SCA'BROUSNESS. n. f. [from scabrous.] Roughness; ruggedness.

SCA'BWORT. n. f. [belenium.] A plant.

SCAD. n. f. A kind of fish. Probably the same with soad.

Of round fish there are sprat, barm, smelts, and scad.

SCAFFOLD. n. f. [eschafaut, French; schavot, Dutch; from schawen, to show.]

- 1. A temporary gallery or stage raised either for shows or spectators.

Pardon
The flat unraised spirit, that hath dar'd
On this unworthy scaffold to bring forth
So great an object.

The throng
On banks and scaffolds under sky might stand.

- 2. The gallery raised for execution of great malefactors.

Fortune smiling at her fortune therein, that a scaffold of execution should grow a scaffold of coronation.

- 3. Frames of timber erected on the side of a building for the workmen.

These outward beauties are but the props and scaffolds
On which we built our love, which, now made perfect, Stands without those supports.

Stills added three hundred commons to the senate; then abolished the office of tribune, as he had only a scaffold to tyranny, whereof he had no further use.

TO SCA'FFOLD. v. n. [from the noun.] To furnish with frames of timber.

SCAFFOLDAGE. n. f. [from scaffold.] Gallery; hollow floor.

A strutting player doth think it rich
To hear the wooden dialogue and sound,
'Twixt his stretch'd footing and the scaffoldage.
Shakespeare.

SCAFFOLDING. n. f. [from scaffold.]

1. Temporary frames or stages.

What are riches, empire, power,
But steps by which we climb to rise, and reach Our wish? and, that obtain'd, down with the scaffolding
Of sceptres and of thrones. Congreve.

Sickness, contributing no less than old age to the shaking down this scaffolding of the body, may discover the inward structure. Pope.

2. Building slightly erected.

Send forth your lab'ring thought;
Let it return with empty notions fraught,
Of airy columns every moment broke,
Of circling whirlpools, and of spheres of smoke:
Yet this solution but once more affords
New change of terms and scaffolding of words.
Prior.

SCALA'DE. n. f. [Fr. scalada, Spanish,
SCALA'DO. n. f. from scala, Lat. a ladder.]

A storm given to a place by raising ladders against the walls.

What can be more strange than that we should within two months have won one town of importance by scalado, battered and assaulted another, and overthrown great forces in the field?
Bacon.

Thou rais'dst thy voice to record the stratagems, the arduous exploits, and the nocturnal scalade of needy heroes, the terror of your peaceful citizens. Arbutnot's Hist. of John Bull.

SCALARY. adj. [from scala, Lat.] Proceeding by steps like those of a ladder.

He made at nearer distances certain elevated places and scalary accents, that they might better ascend or mount their horses. Brown.

To SCALD. v. a. [scaldare, Italian; calidus, Lat.]

1. To burn with hot liquor.

I am scalded with my violent motion,
And spleen of speed to see you Shak. K. John.
O majesty!

When thou do'st pinch thy bearer, thou do'st fit
Like a rich armour worn in heat of day,
That scalds with safety. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Thou art a soul in bliss; but I am bound
Upon a wheel of fire, that mine own tears
Do scald like molten lead. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Here the blue flames of scalding brimstone fall,
Involving swiftly in one ruin all. Cowley.

That I grieve, 'tis true;
But 'tis a grief of fury, not despair!
And if a manly drop or two fall down,
It scalds along my cheeks, like the green wood,
That, spurt'ing in the flame, works outward tears. Dryden's Cleomenes.

It depends not on his will to persuade himself, that what actually scalds him, feels cold. Locke.

Warm cataplasms diffuse; but scalding hot may confirm the tumour: heat, in general, doth not resolve and attenuate the juices of a human body; for too great heat will produce concretions. Arbutnot on Aliments.

The best thing we can do with Wood is to scald
him;

For which operation there's nothing more proper
Than the liquor he drinks in, his own melted copper. Swift.

2. A provincial phrase in husbandry.

In Oxfordshire the four land they follow wh n fun is pretty high, which they call scalding allow. Morimer.

SCALD. n. f. [from the verb.] Scurl on the head.

Her head, altogether bald,
Was overerown with scurl and filthy scald. Spem.

SCALD. adj. Pality; sorry; leucy.

Saucy listers
Will catch at us like strumpets, and scald rhy-mers
Ballad us out o'tune. Shakespeare.

SCALDHEAD. n. f. [skalladur, bald, Island-dick. Hicks.] A loathsome disease; a kind of local leprosy in which the head is covered with a continuous scab.

The serum is corrupted by the infection of the touch of a salt humour, to which the scab, pox, and scaldhead are referrible. Floyer.

SCALE. n. f. [scale, Saxon; schael, Dutch; skal, Islandick]

1. A balance: a vessel suspended by a beam against another vessel; the dish of a balance.

If thou tak'st more
Or less than just a pound, if the scale turn
But in the estimation of a hair,
Thou die'st. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

Your vows to her and me, put in two scales,
Will even weigh, and both as light as tales.
Shakespeare.

Here's an equivocator, that could swear, in both the scales, against either scale. Shakespeare.

Long time in even scales
The battle hung. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The world's scales are even; what the main
In one place gets, another quits again. Cleaveland.

The scales are turn'd, her kindness weighs no
more
Now than my vows. Waller.

In full assemblies let the crowd prevail;
I weigh no merit by the common scale,
The conscience is the test. Dryden.

If we consider the dignity of an intelligent being, and put that in the scales against brute inanimate matter, we may affirm, without overvaluing human nature, that the soul of one vir-tuous and religious man is of greater worth and excellency than the sun and his planets.
Bentley's Sermons.

2. The sign Libra in the Zodiack.

Juno pours out the urn, and Vulcan claims
The scales, as the just product of his flames.
Creech.

3. [Escarille, Fr. squama, Latin.] The small shells or crusts which lying one over another make the coats of fishes.

He puts him on a coat of mail,
Which was made of a fish's scale. Drayton.

Standing aloof, with lead they bruise the scales,
And tear the flesh of the incensed whales. Waller.

4. Any thing exfoliated or deliquated; a thin lamina.

Take jet and the scales of iron, and with a wet feather, when the smith hath taken an heat, rake up the scales that fly from the iron, and those scales you shall grind upon your painter's stone. Præbani.

When a scale of bone is taken out of a wound, burning retards the separation. Sharp's Surgery.

5. [Scala, a ladder, Latin.] Ladder; means of ascent.

Love refines
The thoughts, and heart enlarges; hath his seat
In reason, and is judicious; is the scale
By which to heav'nly love thou may'st ascend.
Milton.

On the bendings of these mountains the marks of several ancient scales of stairs may be seen, by which they used to ascend them. Addison on Italy.

6. The act of storming by ladders.

Others to a city strong Lay siege, encamp'd; by batt'ry, scale, and mine Assaulting. Milton's Paradise Lost.

7. Regular gradation; a regular series rising like a ladder.

Well hast thou the scale of nature for,
From centre to circumference, whereon

In contemplation of created things
By steps we may ascend to God. Milton.

The scale of the creatures is a matter of high speculation. Crom.

The higher nature still advances, and preserves his superiority in the scale of being. Addison.

All the integral parts of nature have a beautiful analogy to one another, and to their mighty original, whose images are more or less expressive, according to their several gradations in the scale of beings. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.

We believe an invisible world, and a scale of spiritual beings, all nobler than ourselves.
Bentley's Sermons.

Far as creation's ample range extends,
The scale of sensual mental pow'rs ascends. Pope.

8. A figure subdivided by lines like the steps of a ladder, which is used to measure proportions between pictures and the thing represented.

The map of London was set out in the year 1653, by Mr. Newcourt, drawn by a scale of yards. Graunt.

9. The series of harmonick or musical proportions.

The bent of his thoughts and reasonings run up and down this scale, that no people can be happy but under good governments. Temple.

10. Any thing mark'd at equal distances.

They take the flow o' th' Nile
By certain scales i' th' pyramid: they know
By th' height, the lowness, or the mean, if dearth Or foison follow. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.

To SCALE. v. a. [scalare, Italian.]

1. [From scala, a ladder.] To climb as by ladders.

Often have I scal'd the craggy oak,
All to dislodge the raven of her nest:
How have I wearied, with many a stroke,
The stately walnut-tree, the while the rest
Under the tree tell all for nuts at strife! Spenser.

They assailed the breach, and others with their scaling ladders scal'd the walls.
Knales's History of the Turks.

The way seems difficult, and steep, to scale
With upright wing against a higher foe. Milton.

Heav'n with these engines had been scal'd,
When mountains heap'd on mountains fail'd.
Waller.

When the bold Typhæus scal'd the sky,
And forc'd great Jove from his own heav'n to fly.
The lesser Gods all suffer'd. Dryden.

2. [From scala, a balance.] To measure or compare; to weigh.

You have found,
Scaling his present bearing with his past,
That he's your fixed enemy. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

3. [From scale of a fish.] To strip off scales;
to take off in a thin lamina.

Raphael was sent to scale away the whiteness of Tobit's eyes. Tob. iii. 17.

4. To pare off a surface.

If all the mountains were scal'd, and the earth made even, the waters would not overflow its smooth surface. Burnet.

To SCALE. v. n. To peel off in thin particles.

Those that cast their shell are the lobster and crab: the old skins are found, but the old shells never; so as it is like they scale off, and crumble away by degrees. Bacon.

SCALED. adj. [from scale.] Squamous;
having scales like fishes.

Half my Egypt was submerg'd, and made
A cistern for scal'd snakes. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleop.

SCALE'NE. n. f. [French: scalenum, Lat.]

In geometry, a triangle that has its three sides unequal to each other. Bailey.

SCALINESS. n. f. [from scaly.] The state of being scaly.

SCALL. n. f. [skalladur, bald, Islandick.]

See SCABROUS. Leprosy; morbid baldness.

Upon thy bald head'st thou have the scall.
Chaucer.

It is a dry scall, a leprosy upon the head.
Leo. xiii. 30.

SCALLION. n. f. [Scallina, Italian; skallonia, Latin.] A kind of onion.

SCALLOP. n. f. [scallap, Fr.] A fish with a hollow pectinated shell.

So th' emperor Caligula,
That triumph'd o'er the British sea,
Engag'd his legions in fierce battles
With periwinkles, prawns, and muscles;
And led his troops with furious gallops,
To charge whole regiments of scallops. Hudibras.
The sand is in Scilly glistening, which may be occasioned from freestone mingled with white scallop shells. Morimer.

To SCALLOP. v. a. To mark on the edge with segments of circles.

SCALP. n. f. [schelp, Dutch, a shell; scalpo, Italian.]

1. The scull; the cranium; the bone that incloses the brain.

High brandishing his bright dew-burning blade,
Upon his crested scalp so sore did smite,
That to the scull a yawning wound it made.
Fairy Queen.

If the fracture be not complicated with a wound of the scalp, or the wound is too small to admit of the operation, the fracture must be laid bare by taking away a large piece of the scalp.
Shap's Surgery.

2. The integuments of the head.

White beards have arm'd then thin and hairless scalps.

Against thy majesty. Shakespeare's Richard II.

The hairy scalps
Are whar'd aloft, while numerous trunks bestrow
Th' ensanguin'd field. Philips.

To SCALP. v. a. [from the noun.] To deprive the scull of its integuments.

We seldom inquire for a fracture of the scull,
by scalping, but that the scalp itself is contused.
Sharp.

SCALPEL. n. f. [French; scalpulum, Lat.] An instrument used to sciape a bone by surgeons.

SCALY. adj. [from scale.] Covered with scales.

The river horse and scaly crocodile. Milton.

His awful summons they so soon obey;

So hear the scaly herd when Proteus blows,

And so to a sure follow through the sea. Dryden.

A scaly fish with a forked tail. Woodward.

To SCAMBLE. v. n. [This word, which is scarcely in use, has much exercised the etymological sagacity of Meric Casanbon; but, as is usual, to no purpose.]

1. To be turbulent and rapacious; to scramble; to get by struggling with others.

Have fresh chaff in the bin,
And somewhat to scamble for hog and for hen.
Tusser.

Scambling, out-facing, fashion-mong'ring boys
That lie, and cog, and flout, deprave and slander.
Shakespeare.

That self bill is urg'd, and had against us past,
But that the scambling and unquiet time

Did push it out of further question. Shakespeare.

He was no sooner entered into the town but a scambling soldier clapt hold of his bridle, which he thought was in a begging or a drunken fashion. Watson.

2. To shift awkwardly.

Some scambling shifts may be made without them. Moss.

To SCAMBLE. v. a. To mangle; to maul.

My wood was cut in patches, and other parts amongst the creatures, were designed to defeccate and exalt our conceptions, not to inveigle or detain our passions. Boyle.

SCATTERLING. n. s. [from scatter.] A vagabond; one that has no home or settled habitation. An elegant word, but disused.

Such lofels and scatterlings cannot easily, by any ordinary officer, be gotten, when challenged for any such fact. Spenser.

Gathering unto him all the scatterlings and outlaws out of all the woods and mountains, in which they long had lurked, he marched forth into the English pale. Spenser on Ireland.

SCATURIENT. adj. [from scaturiens, Latin.]
Springing as a fountain.SCATURIGINOUS. adj. [from scaturigo, Latin.] Full of springs or fountains.

DiD.

SCAVENGER. n. s. [from scapan, to shave, perhaps to sweep, Saxon.] A petty magistrate, whose province is to keep the streets clean: more commonly the laboured employed in removing filth.

Since it is made a labour of the mind, as to inform mens judgments, and move their affections, to resolve difficult places of Scripture, to decide and clear off controversies, I cannot see how to be a butcher, scavenger, or any other such trade does at all qualify men for this work.
South.

Fasting's Nature's scavenger.

Baynard.

Dirk the scavenger, with equal grace,
 Flirts from his cart the mud in Walpole's face.
Swift.

SCELERAT. n. s. [Fr. sceleratus, Lat.]
A villain; a wicked wretch. A word introduced unnecessarily from the French by a Scottish author.

Scelerates can by no arts stifle the cries of a wounded conscience. Cleyn.

SCENARY. n. s. [from scene.]

The appearances of place or things.

He must gain a relish of the works of nature, be conversant in the various scenery of a life. Ardisson.

The representation of the place in which an action is performed.

The progress of the sound, and the scenery of the bordering regions, are imitated from Ma.

 vii. on the founding the horn of Alecco. Pope.

3. The disposition and consecration of the scenes of a play.

To make a more perfect model of a picture, is, in the language of poets, to draw up the scenery of a play. Dryden.

SCENE. n. s. [scena, Lat. scenæ, French.]

1. The stage; the theatre of dramattick poetry.

2. The general appearance of any action;
 the whole contexture of objects; a display; a series; a regular disposition.

Cedar and pine, and fir and branching palm,
 A sylvan scene; and as the ranks ascend Shade above shade, a woody theatre
 Of statehest view. Milton.

Now prepare thee for another scene. Milton.
 A mute scene of sorrow, mixt with fear;
 Still on the table lay the unfinished cheer. Dryd.
 A larger scene of action is display'd,
 And, rising hence, a greater work is weigh'd.
Dryden.

Ev'ry several place must be
 A scene of triumph and revenge to me. Dryden.
 When rising Spring adorns the mead,
 A charming scene of nature is display'd. Dryden.

Eternity! thou pleasing, dreadful thought!
 Through what variety of untry'd beings,
 Through what new scenes and changes must we pass! Addison.

About eight miles distance from Naples lies a very noble scene of antiquities: what they call Virgil's tomb is the first. Addison on Italy.

Say, shepherd, say, are these reflections true?
 Or was it but the woman's fear that drew
 This cruel scene, unjust to love and you? Prior.

3. Part of a play.

It shall be so my care
 To have you royally appointed, as if
 The scene you play were mine. Shakespeare.
 Our author would excuse these youthful scenes Begotten at his entrance. Granville.

4. So much of an act of a play as passes between the same persons in the same place.

If his characters were good,
 The scenes entire, and freed from noise and blood,
 The scenæ great, yet circumscribed by time,
 The words scenæ rec'd, but sliding into rhyme,
 He thought, in hitting these, his business done.
Dryden.

5. The place represented by the stage.

The king is set from London, and the scene
 Is now transported to Southampton. Shaksfp.

6. The hanging of the theatre adapted to the play.

The alteration of scenes feeds and relieves the eye, before it be full of the same object. Bacon.

SCENICK. adj. [scenique, Fr. from scene.]
Dramatick; theatrical.

With scenick virtue charm the rising age. Amos

SCENOGRAPHICAL. adj. [scenographos, Gr.] Drawn in perspective.SCENOGRAPHICALLY. adv. [from sceno- graphical.] In perspective.

If the workman be skilled in perspective, more than one face may be represented in our diagram
scenographically. Mortimer.

SCENOGRAPHY. n. s. [scenographie, Fr.] The art of perspective.SCENT. n. s. [sentir, to smell, French.]

1. The power of smelling; the smell.

A hunted hare treads back her mazes, crosses and confounds her former track, and uses all possible methods to divert the scene. Watts.

2. The object of smell; odour good or bad.

Brilliant cried upon it at the meekest loss,
 And twice to-day pick'd out the dullest steam.
Shaksfp.

The plague, they report, hath a scent of the smell of a mellow apple. Bacon.

Good scents do purify the brain,
 Awake the fancy, and the wits refine. Davis.

Partake
 The season, prime for sweetest scents and airs.
Milton.

Exulting, 'till he finds their nobler sense
 Their disproportion'd speed does recompense;
 Then curses his conspiring feet, whose scent
 Betrays that safety which their swiftness lent.
Denham.

Chearful health,
 His duteous handmaid, through the air improv'd,
 With lavish hand diffuses scents ambrosial. Prior.

3. Chace followed by the smell.
 He gained the observations of innumerable ages, and travelled upon the same scent into Afthopia. Temple.

To SCENT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To smell; to perceive by the nose.
 So scented the grim feature, and upturn'd
 His nostrils wide into the murky air,
 Sagacious of his quarry from so far. Milton.

2. To perfume; or to imbue with odour good or bad.

Balm, from a silver box distill'd around,
 Shall all bedew the roots, and scent the sacred ground. Dryden.

Admon spies
 His op'ning hounds, and now he hears their cries;
 A gen'rous pack, or to maintain the chace,
 Or snuff the vapour from the scented grass. Addison.

SCENTLESS. adj. [from scent.] Inodo-rous; having no smell.SCÉPTRE. n. s. [scēptum, Latin; scēp- tre, Fr.] The ensign of royalty born in the hand.

Nor shall proud Lancaster usurp my right,
 Nor hold the sceptre in his childish fist. Shakespeare.

How, best of kings, do'st thou a sceptre bear
 How, best of poets, do'st thou laurel wear!
 But two things rare the fates had in their store,
 And gave thee both, to shew they could no more.
B. Johnson.

I sing the man who Judah's sceptre bore
 In that right hand which held the crook before.
Cowley.

The parliament presented those acts which were prepared by them to the royal sceptre, in which were some laws restraining the extravagant power of the nobility. Clarendon.

The court of Rome has, in other instance, so well attested its good minagery, that it is not credible crowns and sceptres are conferred gratis.
De la Haye.

SCÉPTERED. adj. [from sceptre.] Bearing a sceptre.

The sceptred heralds call
 To council, in the city-gates. Milton's Par. Lost.

To Britain's queen the scepter'd suppliant bends,
 To her his crowns and infant race commends.
Tickel.

SCÉPTICK. n. s. See SKEPTICK.SCHE'DULE. n. s. [schedula, Latin; sche- dule, French.]

1. A small scroll.

The first published schedules being brought to a grave knight, he read over an unsavoury sentence or two, and delivered back the libel. Hooker.

2. A writing additional or appendant.

All ill, which all Prophets or poets spake, and all which shall Be annex'd in schedules unto this by me,
 Fall on that man! Donne.

3. A little inventory.

I will give out schedules of my beauty: it shall be inventoried, and every particle and utensil label'd to my will. Shaksfp.

SCHE'MATISM. n. s. [σχηματισμός.]

1. Com-

1. Combination of the aspects of heavenly bodies.

2. Particular form or disposition of a thing. Every particle of matter, whatever form of schematism it puts on, must in all conditions be equally extended, and therefore take up the same room. Locke.

SCHEMATIST. n. f. [from scheme.] A projector; one given to forming schemes. Locke.

SCHEME. n. f. [from scheme.] 1. A plan; a combination of various things into one view, design, or purpose; a system.

Were our senses made much quicker, the appearance and outward scheme of things would have quite another face to us, and be inconsistent with our well-being. Locke.

We shall never be able to give ourselves a satisfactory account of the divine conduct, without forming such a scheme of things as shall at once take in time and eternity. Atterbury.

2. A project; a contrivance; a design. He forms the well-concerted scheme of mischief; 'tis fix'd, 'tis done, and both are doom'd to death. Rowe.

The haughty monarch was laying schemes for suppressing the ancient liberties, and removing the ancient boundaries of kingdoms. Atterbury.

The stoical scheme of supplying our wants by lopping off our desires, is like cutting off our feet when we want shoes. Swift.

3. A representation of the aspects of the celestial bodies; any lineal or mathematical diagram.

It hath embroiled astrology in the erection of schemes, and the judgment of death and diseases. Brown.

It is a scheme and face of heaven, As th' aspects are disposed this even. Hudibras.

SCHEMER. n. f. [from scheme.] A projector; a contriver.

SCHEMIS. n. f. [from scheme.] An habitude; state of any thing with respect to other things.

If that mind which has existing in itself from all eternity all the simple essences of things, and consequently all their possible schemes or habitudes, should ever change, there would arise a new scheme in the mind, which is contrary to the supposition. Norris.

SCIRRUS. n. f. [from scirrhe, French. This should be written scirrhus, not merely because it comes from scirrhe, but because c in English has before e and i the sound of s. See SKEPTICK.] An indurated gland.

Any of these three may degenerate into a scirrhus, and that scirrhus into a cancer. Wise.

SCIRRHUS. adj. [from scirrhus.] Having a gland indurated; consisting of a gland indurated.

How they are to be treated when they are stumorous, scirrhous, or cancerous, you may see. Wise.

SCIRRHOSITY. n. f. [from scirrhous.] An induration of the glands.

The difficulty of breathing, occasioned by scirrhosity of the glands, is not to be cured. Arbutnot on Diet.

SCHISM. n. f. [from schisma, Fr.] A separation or division in the church of God.

Set bounds to our passions by reason, to our errors by truth, and to our schism by charity. King Charles.

Oppose schism by unity, hypocrisy by sobriety, and debauchery by temperance. Spratt.

When a schism is once spread, there grows at length a dispute which the schismatics: in the case of the law the schism lies on that side which opposes itself to the religion of the state. Swift.

SCHISMATICAL. adv. [from schismatic, Fr. from schismatic.] Implying schism; practising schism.

By these tumults all factions, seditions, and schismatical proposals against government, ecclesiastical and civil, must be backed. King Charles.

Here bare anathemas fall but like to many bruta fulmina upon the obstinate and schismatical, who are like to think themselves shrewdly hurt by being cut off from that body which they chuse not to be of, and so being punished into a quiet enjoyment of their beloved separation. South.

SCHISMATICALLY. adv. [from schismatical.] In a schismatical manner.

SCHISMATICK. n. f. [from schisma.] One who separates from the true church.

No known heretick nor schismatick should be suffered to go into these countries. Bacon.

Thus you behold the schismatick bravado's Wild speaks in squibs, and Calamy in granado's. Burton.

The schismatick united in a solemn league and covenant to alter the whole system of spiritual government. Swift.

To SCHISMATIZE. v. a. [from schisma.] To commit the crime of schism; to make a breach in the communion of the church.

SCHOLAR. n. f. [from scholaris, Lat. scholar, Fr.]

1. One who learns of a master; a disciple.

Many times that which deserves approbation would hardly find favour, if they which propose it were not to profess themselves scholars, and followers of the ancients. Hooker.

The scholars of the Stagyrite, Who for the old opinion fight, Would make their modern friends confess The difference but from more to less. Prior.

2. A man of letters.

This same scholar's fate, res augusta domi, hinders the promoting of learning. Wilkins.

To watch occasions to correct others in their discourse, and not slip any opportunity of showing their talents; scholars are most blamed for. Locke.

3. A pedant; a man of books.

To spend too much time in studies, is both; to make judgment wholly by their rules, is the humour of a scholar: they perfect nature, and are perfected by experience. Bacon.

4. One who has a lettered education. My cousin William is become a good scholar: he is at Oxford still, is he not? Shakespeare.

SCHOLARSHIP. n. f. [from scholar.]

1. Learning; literature; knowledge. It pities my very heart to think that a man of my master's understanding, and great scholarship, who had a book of his own in print, should talk so outrageously. Pope.

2. Literary education.

This place should be school and university, not needing a remove to any other house of scholarship. Milton.

3. Exhibition or maintenance for a scholar. Ainsworth.

SCHOLASTICAL. adj. [from scholasticus, Lat.] Belonging to a scholar or school.

SCHOLASTICALLY. adv. [from scholastic.] According to the niceties or methods of the schools.

No moralists or casuists, that treat scholastically of justice but treat of gratitude, under that general head, as a part of it. South.

SCHOLASTICK. adj. [from schola, Lat. scholasticus, Fr.]

1. Pertaining to the school; practised in school.

I would render this intelligible to every rational man, however little versed in scholastic learning. Digby on Bachelors.

Scholastic education, like a trade, does to fix a man in a particular way, that he is not fit to judge of any thing that lies out of that way. Burnet's Theory.

2. Befitting the school; suitable to the school; pedantick; needlessly subtle.

The favour of proposing there, in convenient sort, whatsoever ye can object, which thing I have known them to grant, of scholastic courtesy unto strangers, never hath nor ever will be denied you. Hooker.

Sir Francis Bacon was wont to say, that those who left useful studies for useless scholastic speculations, were like the Olympick gamesters, who abstained from necessary labours, that they might be fit for such as were not so. Bacon.

Both sides charge the other with idolatry, and that is a matter of conscience, and not a scholastic nicety. Stillington.

SCHOLIAST. n. f. [from scholiaste, Fr. scholiastes, Latin.] A writer of explanatory notes.

The title of this satyr, in some ancient manuscripts, was the reproach of idleness; though in others of the scholastic, 'tis inscribed against the luxury of the rich. Dryden.

What Gellius or Stobaeus cook'd before, Or chew'd by blind old scholastic o'er and o'er. Pope.

SCHOLION. n. f. [Latin.] A note; an SCHOLIUM. n. f. [Latin.] explanatory observation.

Hereunto have I added a certain gloss or scholium, for the exposition of old words, and harder phrases, which manner of glossing and commenting will seem strange in our language. Spenser.

Some cast all their metaphysical and moral learning into the method of mathematicians, and bring every thing relating to those abstracted or practical sciences under theorems, problems, postulates, scholia, and corollaries. Watts.

SCHOLY. n. f. [from scholastic, Fr. scholium, Lat.] An explanatory note. This word, with the verb following, is, I fancy, peculiar to the learned Hooker.

He, therefore, which made us to live, had also taught us to pray, to the end, that speaking unto the Father in the Son's own prescript form, without scholastic or gloss of ours, we may be sure that we utter nothing which God will deny. Hooker.

That scholastic had need of a very favourable reader, and a tractable, that should think it plain construction, when to be commanded to the word, and grounded upon the word, are made all one. Hooker.

To SCHOLY. v. n. [from the noun.] To write expositions.

The preacher should want a text, whereupon to scholy. Hooker.

SCHOOL. n. f. [from schola, Lat. ecole, Fr.]

1. A house of discipline and instruction.

Their age the same, their inclinations too, And bred together in one school they grow. Dryden.

2. A place of literary education; an university.

My end being private, I have not expressed my conceptions in the language of the schools. Digby.

Writers on that subject have turned it into a composition of hard words, trifles, and subtilties for the mere use of the schools, and that only to mislead men with empty sounds. Watts.

3. A state of instruction.

The vest breed to the rural trade, Set him sometimes to school, and let him be instructed there in rules of husbandry. Dryden.

4. System of doctrine as delivered by particular teachers.

No cold brain could ever yet propound,
Touching the soul, so vain and fond a thought;
But some among these masters have been found,
Which in their schools the self-same thing had taught.

Let no man be less confident in his faith, concerning the great blessings God designs in these divine mysteries, by reason of any difference in the several schools of Christians, concerning the consequent blessings thereof.

5. The age of the church, and form of theology succeeding that of the fathers; so called, because this mode of treating religion arose from the use of academical disputations.

The first principles of Christian religion should not be forced with school points and private tenets.

A man may find an infinite number of propositions in books of metaphysics, school divinity, and natural philosophy, and know as little of God, spirits, or bodies, as he did before.

To SCHOOL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To instruct; to train.

Una her besought to be so good
As in her virtuous rules to school her knight.

He's gentle, never school'd, and yet learned.

2. To teach with superiority; to tutor.

You shall go with me;
I have some private schooling for you both.

Cousin, school yourself; but for your husband,
He's noble, wise, judicious.

And ask why God's anointed he revild.
If this be schooling, 'tis well for the considerer.
I'll engage that no adversary of his shall in this sense ever school him.

SCHOOLBOY. n. s. [school and boy.] A boy that is in his rudiments at school.

Schoolboys tears take up
The glasses of his light.

He grins, smacks, thrugs, and such an itch endures,
As prentices or schoolboys, which do know
Of some gay sport abroad, yet dare not go.

Once he had heard a schoolboy tell,
How Semele of mortal race
By thunder died.

SCHOOLDAY. n. s. [school and day.] Age in which youth is sent to school.

All schooldays: friendship, childhood, innocence?

SCHOOLFELLOW. n. s. [school and fellow.]
One bred at the same school.

Thy flatter'd method on the youth pursue;
Join'd with his schoolfellows by two and two:
Persuade them first to lead an empty wheel,
In length of time produce the lab'ring yoke.

The emulation of schoolfellows often puts life and industry into young lads.

SCHOOLHOUSE. n. s. [school and house.]
House of discipline and instruction.

Fair Uta, an Fidella fair request,
To have her a night unto her schoolhouse plac'd.

SCHOOLMAN. n. s. [school and man.]

1. One versed in the niceties and subtilties of academical disputation.

The king, though no good schoolman, converted one of them by dispute.
Unlearn'd, he knew no schoolman's subtle art;
No language, but the language of the heart.

2. A writer of scholastic divinity or philosophy.

If a man's wit be not apt to distinguish or find differences, let him study the schoolman.

To schoolmen I bequeath my doubtfulness,
My sickness to physicians.

Men of nice palates could not relish Aristotle,
as he was dress'd up by the schoolmen.

Let subtle schoolmen teach these friends to fight,
More studious to divide than to unite.

SCHOOLMASTER. n. s. [school and master.]

One who presides and teaches in a school.

L, thy schoolmaster, have made thee more profit
Than other princes can, that have more time
For vainer hours, and tutors not so careful.

Adrian VI. was some time schoolmaster to Charles V.

The ancient sophists and rhetoricians lived 'till they were an hundred years old; and so likewise did many of the grammarians and schoolmasters, as Orbilius.

SCHOOLMISTRESS. n. s. [school and mistress.] A woman who governs a school.

Such precepts I have selected from the most considerable which we have from nature, that exact schoolmistress.

My schoolmistress, like a vixen Turk,
Maintains her lazy husband by our work.

SCHREIGHT. n. s. [turdus visciatorius.]

A fish.

SCIAGRAPHY. n. s. [sciographie, Fr. oua-graphie.]

1. [In architecture.] The profile or section of a building, to shew the inside thereof.

2. [In astronomy.] The art of finding the hour of the day or night by the shadow of the sun, moon, or stars.

SCIATHERICAL. } adj. [sciaterique, Fr.
SCIATHERICK } ouathierique.] Belonging to a sun-dial.

These were also, from great antiquity, sci-atherial or sun-dials, by the shadow of a stile or gnomon denoting the hours, an invention ascribed unto Anaximenes by Pliny.

SCIATICA. } n. s. [sciaticque, Fr. ischiadica SCIATICK } ouathierique.] The hip gout.

Whu of your hips has the most profound sciatica?

Thou cold sciatica,
Cripple our senators, that their limbs may halt
As lamely as their manners.

The Scythians, using continual riding, were generally molested with the sciatica, or hip gout.

Rack'd with sciatick, martyr'd with the stone,
Will any mortal let himself alone?

SCIATICAL. adj. [from sciatica.] Afflicting
the hip.

In obstinate sciatical pains, blistering and cauteries have been found effectual.

SCIENCE. n. s. [science, Fr. scientia,
Lat.]

1. Knowledge.

If we conceive God's sight or science, before the creation, to be extended to all and every part of the world, seeing every thing as it is, his presence or foresight of any action of mine,
or rather his science or sight, from all eternity, lays no necessity on any thing to come to pass, more than my seeing the sun move hath to do in the moving of it.

The indisputable mathematics, the only science Heaven hath yet vouchsafed humanity, have but few votaries among the slaves of the Stag-nite.

2. Certainty grounded on demonstration.

So you arrive at truth, though not at science.

3. Art attained by precepts, or built on principles.

Science perfects genius, and moderates that fury of the fancy which cannot contain itself
within the bounds of reason.

3. Art attained by precepts, or built on principles.

Science perfects genius, and moderates that fury of the fancy which cannot contain itself
within the bounds of reason.

4. Any art or species of knowledge.

No science doth make known the first principles, whereon it buildeth; but they are always taken as plain and manifest in themselves, or as proved and granted already, some former knowledge having made them evident.

Whatever we may learn by them, we only attain according to the manner of natural sciences, which mere discourse of wit and reason findeth out.

I present you with a man
Cunning in music and the mathematics,
To instruct her fully in those sciences.

5. One of the seven liberal arts, grammar, rhetorick, logick, arithmetick, music,
geometry, astronomy.

Good sense, which only is the gift of Heav'n,
And though no science, fairly worth the sev'n.

SCI'ENTIAL. adj. [from science.] Producing science.

From the tree her step she turn'd;
But first low reverence done, as to the pow'r
That dwelt within: whose presence had infused
Into the plant sciential sap, deriv'd
From nectar, drink of gods.

SCI'ENTIAL. } adj. [scientifique, Fr.
SCI'ENTIAL } scientia and sci. Lat.]
Producing demonstrative knowledge;
producing certainty.

Natural philosophy proceeding from settled principles, therein is expected a satisfaction from scientific progressions, and such as beget a true or rational belief.

No where are there more quick inventive, and penetrating capacities, fraught with all kind of scientific knowledge.

No man, who first trafficks into a foreign country, has any scientific evidence that there is such a country, but by report, which can produce no more than a moral certainty; that is, a very high probability, and such as there can be no reason to except against.

The systems of natural philosophy that have obtained, are to be read more to know the hypotheses, than with hopes to gain there a comprehensive, scientific, and satisfactory knowledge of the works of nature.

SCI'ENTIAL. } adv. [from scientific.]
In such a manner as to produce knowledge.

Sometimes it rests upon testimony, because it is easier to believe than to be scientifically instructed.

SCI'MITAR. n. s. [See CIMETER.] A short sword with a convex edge.

I'll heat his blood with Greekish wine to-night,
Which with my scimitar I'll cool to-morrow.

SCINK. n. s. A cast calf.

In Scotland and in London they call it slink.

To SCINTILLATE. v. n. [scintillo,
Lat.] To sparkle; to emit sparks.

SCINTILLA'TION. n. s. [scintillatio, Lat.]
from scintillate } The act of sparkling;
sparks emitted.

These scintillations are not the accession of the air upon the collision of two hard bodies, but rather the inflammable effluences discharged from the bodies collided.

He faith the planets scintillation is not seen,
because of their propinquity.

SCI'OLIST. n. s. [sciolus, Lat.] One who knows many things superficially.

It was this vain idolizing of authors which gave birth to that silly vanity of impertinent citations; these ridiculous fooleries signify nothing to the more generous discerners, but the pendency of the affected scifists. Clayton's Scifist.

These passages were enough to humble the presumption of our modern scifists, if their pride were not as great as their ignorance. Temple.

SCIOLOUS. adj. [sciolus, Lat.] Superficially or imperfectly knowing. Not used.

I could wish these sciolous scotists had more judgment joined with their zeal. H-well.

SCIMACHY. n. f. [sciamachie, Fr. scia and μαχη.] Battle with a shadow. This should be written sciamachy.

To avoid this scimachy, or imaginary combat of words, let me know, Sir, what you mean by the name of tyrant? Conway.

SCION. n. f. [scion, Fr.] A small twig taken from one tree to be engrafted into another.

Sweet maid, we marry
A gentle scion to the wildest stock;
And make conceive a bark of bair kind
By bud of nobler race. Shaksp. Winter's Tale March is drawn, in his left hand blossoms, and seems upon his arm. Peacham.
The scion are best of an old tree.

SCIRE FACIAS. n. f. [Latin.] A writ judicial in law, most commonly to call a man to shew cause unto the court whence it is sent, why execution of a judgment passed should not be made. This writ is not granted before a year and a day is passed after the judgment given. Conwell.

SCISSIBLE. adj. [from scissus, Lat.] Capable of being divided smoothly by a sharp edge.

The scissibles of impressible and not impressible, scissible and not scissible, and many other passions of matter, are puerile notions. Bacon.

SCISSION. n. f. [scission, Fr. scisso, Lat.] The act of cutting.

Neives may be wounded by scission or puncture: the former way they are usually cut through, and wholly to use from action. Whitman's Surgery.

SCISSOR. v. f. [This word is variously written, as it is supposed to be derived by different writers; of whom some write cissors, from cardo, or cardo; others scissors, from cardo; and some cissors, scissors, or scissors, from ciseaux, Fr.] A small pair of sheers, or blades moveable on a pivot, and intercepting the thing to be cut.

His beard they have sing'd off with brands of fire;
And eye, as it blaz'd, they threw on him
Great pails of puddled mire to quench the hairs
My master preaches patience to him, and the while His man with scissors nicks him for a fool. Shak.

Wanting the scissors, with these hands, I'll tear,
If that obstruct my sight, this load of hair. Prior.

When the lawyers and tradesmen brought extravagant bills, Sir Roger wore a pair of scissors in his pocket, with which he would snip a quarter of a yard off nicely. Arbutnot.

SCISSURE. n. f. [scissum, Lat.] A crack; a rent; a fissure.

The breach seems like the scissures and ruptures of an earthquake, and threatens to swallow all that attempt to close it, and reserves its cure only for omnipotence. Deacy of Pitt.

SCLEROTICK. adj. [scleroticus, Fr. scleroticus.] Hard: an epithet of one of the coats of the eye.

The ligaments observed in the inside of the sclerotic tunicle of the eye, serve instead of a muscle, by their contraction, to alter the figure of the eye. Ray on the Creation.

Of two noblemen of the west of England, the one was given to scoff, but kept ever royal cheer in his house; the other would ask of those that had been at his table, Tell truly, was there never a stout or dry blow given? Bacon.

There is no greater argument of a light and inconsiderate person, than prophane to scoff at religion. Tillotson.

Such is love,
And such the laws of his fantastick empire,
The wanton boy delights to bend the mighty,
And scoff at the vain wisdom of the wife. Rowe.

SCOFF. n. f. [from the verb.] Contumelious ridicule; expression of scorn; contumelious language.

Our answer therefore to their reason is, no; to their scoffs, nothing. Hooker.

With scoffs and scorns, and contumelious taunts,
In open market-place produce'd they me. Shakspere's Henry VI.

How could men surrender up their reason to flattery, more abusive and reproachful than the rudest scoffs and the sharpest invectives? South.

Some little souls, that have got a smattering of astronomy or chemistry, for want of a due acquaintance with other sciences, make a scoff at them all, in comparison of their favourite science. Watts.

SCOFFER. n. f. [from scoff.] Insolent ridiculer; saucy scorner; contumelious reproacher.

Sell when you can; you are not for all markets:
Cry the man merry, love him, take his offer;
Foul is the most foul, being found to be a scoffer. Shakspere.

Divers have herded themselves amongst these profane scoffers, not that they are convinced by their reasons, but terrified by their contumelies. Government of the Tongue.

Consider what the apostle tells these scoffers they were ignorant of, not that there was a deluge, but he tells them that they were ignorant that the heavens and the earth of old were so and so constituted. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

SCOFFINGLY. adv. [from scoffing.] In contempt; in ridicule.

Aristotle applied this hemistick scoffingly to the sycophants at Athens. Brucome.

SCOOPER. n. s. [from scoop.] One who scoops.

SCOPE. n. s. [scopus, Lat.]

1. Aim; intention; drift.

Your scope is as mine own, So to enforce or qualify the laws, As to your soul seems good.

His coming hither hath no farther scope Than for his lineal royalties, and to beg Infranchisement immediate on his knees.

Had the whole scope of the author been answerable to his title, he would have only undertaken to prove what every man is convinced of; but the drift of the pamphlet is to stir up our compassion towards the rebels.

2. Thing aimed at; mark; final end.

The scope of all their pleading against man's authority is to overthrow such laws and constitutions in the church, as, depending thereupon, if they should therefore be taken away, would leave neither face nor memory of church to continue long in the world.

To aim their counsels to the fairest scope.

We should impute the war to the scope at which it aimeth.

He, in what he counsels, and in what excels, Misraful, grounds his courage on despair And utter dissolution, as the scope Or all his aim.

3. Room; space; amplitude of intellectual view.

An heroic poet is not tied to a bare representation of what is true, but that he might let himself loose to visionary objects, which may give him a freer scope for imagination.

These theorems being admitted into optics, there would be scope enough of handling that science voluminously, after a new manner; not only by teaching those things which tend to the perfection of vision, but also by determining mathematically all kinds of phenomena of colours which could be produced by refraction.

4. Liberty; freedom from restraint.

If this constrain them to grant that their axiom is not to take any place, save in those things only, where the church hath larger scope, it reflects that they search out some stronger season.

That my pent heart may have some scope to beat, Or else I swoon with this dead killing news.

5. Liberty beyond just limits; licence.

It was my fault to give the people scope, Be my tyranny to strike and gall them I bid them do.

Being moody, give him line and scope, Till that his passions, like a whale on ground, Consider themselves with working.

A garden-worm should be well scoured eight days in moat, before you wash with him. Walt. Angler.

Beneath the lamp and tawdry ribbons glar'd,
The new scourt'd manteau, and the flattern air. Gay.

4. To remove by scouring.

Never came reformation in a flood
With such a heady current, scouring faults;
Nor ever hydra-headed wilfulness
So soon did lose his seat, and all at once,
As in this king. Shakespeare's Henry V.

I will wear a garment all of blood,
And stain my favour in a bloody mask,
Which, wash'd away, shall scour my shame with it. Shakespeare.

Then in the clemency of upward air
We'll scour our spots, and the dire thunder's scar. Dryden.

5. [scorrere, Ital.] To range about, in order to catch or drive away something; to clear away.

The kings of Lacedemon having sent out some galleys, under the charge of one of their nephews, to scour the sea of the pirates, they met us. Sidney.

Divers are kept continually to scour these seas, infested greatly by pirates. Sandys.

If with thy guards thou scour'st the streets by night,
And dost in murders, rapes, and spoils delight,
Pleas not thyself the flatterer crowd to hear. Dryden.

6. To pass swiftly over.

Sometimes
He scours the right hand coast, sometimes the left.
Milton.
Not half the number in their seats are found;
But moss and weeds lie grow'ing on the ground;
The points of spears are stuck within the shield,
The steeds without their riders scour the field,
The knights unhors'd, Dryden.
When Ajax strives some rock's vast weight to throw,
The line top labours, and the words move slow;
Not to when swift Camilla scours the plain, Flies o'er th' unbending corn, and skims along the main. Pope's Essay on Criticism.

To SCOUR. v. n.

1. To perform the office of cleansing domestic utensils.

I keep his house, and wash, wring, brew, bake,
scour, dress meat, and make the beds. Shaksp.

2. To clean.

Warm water is softer than cold; for it scoureth better. Bacon.

3. To be purged or lax; to be diseased with looseness.

Some apothecaries, upon stamping colocintida, have been put into a great scouring by the vapour only. Bacon.
Convulsions and scouring, they say, do often cause
one another. Gruant's Bills of Mortality.
If you turn sheep into wheat or eye to feed, let it not be too rank, lest it make them scour.
Mortimer's Husbandry.

4. To rove; to range.

Barbarossa, scouring along the coast of Italy, struck an exceeding terror into the minds of the citizens of Rome. Kneller.

5. To run here and there.

The enemy's drum is heard, and fearful scouring
Doth choke the air with dust. Shaksp. Timon.

6. To run with great eagerness and swiftness; to scamper.

She from him fled with all her pow'r,
Who after her as hastily 'gan scour. Fairy Queen.
I saw men scour on their way: I eyed them Even to their ships. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.
Word was brought him, in the middle of his schemes, that his house was robbed; and so away
he scours to learn the truth. L'Estrange.
If they be men of fraud, they'll scour off themselves, and leave those that trust them to pay the reckoning. L'Estrange.
So four fierce couriers, starting to the race,
Scour through the plain, and lengthen ev'ry pace;
Nor reins, nor curbs, nor threatening cries they
fear,
But force along the trembling charioteers. Dryden.
As soon as any foreign object presses upon the sense, those spirits, which are posted upon the out-guards, immediately take the alarm, and scour off to the brain, which is the head quarters. Collier.
Swift at her call her husband scour'd away
To wreak his hunger on the destin'd prey. Pope.

SCOURER. n. f. [from scour.]

One that cleans by rubbing.
A purge, rough and quick.
One who runs swiftly.

SCOURGE. n. f. [escourgée, French; scorreggia, Italian; corrigia, Latin.]

A whip; a lash; an instrument of discipline.
When he had made a scourge of small cords, he drove them all out of the temple. John, ii. 15.
The scourge
... and the torturing hour,
... as to penance. Milton.
... a vindictive affliction.
What scourge for perjury monarchially afford falls Clarence?
Shaksp.

See what a scourge is laid upon your hate,
That heav'n finds means to kill your joys with love. Shaksp.

Famine and plague are sent as scourges for amendment. Esdras.

3. One that afflicts, harasses, or destroys. Thus Attila was called flagellum Dei.

Is this the scourge of France?
Is this the Talbot so much fear'd abroad,
That with his name the mothers still their babes?
Shaksp. Henry VI.

Such conquerors are not the favourites but scourges of God, the instruments of that vengeance. Atterbury's Sermons.

In all these trials I have borne a part;
I was myself the scourge that caus'd the smart.
Pope

Immortal Jove!

Let kings no more with gentle mercy sway,
Or bless a people willing to obey;
But crush the nations with an iron rod,
And every monarch be the scourge of God. Pope.

4. A whip for a top.

If they had a top, the scourge stick and leather strap should be left to their own making. Locke.

To SCOURGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To lash with a whip; to whip.

The gods are just; and of our pleasant vices Make instruments to scourge us. Shak. King Lear.
Is it lawful for you to scourge a Roman?
Acts, xxii. 25.

He scourg'd with many a stroke th' indignant waves. Milton.

When a professor of any religion is set up to be laughed at, this cannot help us to judge of the truth of his faith, any better than if he were scourg'd. Watts.

2. To punish; to chastise; to chasten; to chastigate with any punishment or affliction.

Seeing that thou hast been scourg'd from heaven, declare the mighty power of God. 2 Mac. iii. 34.

He will scourge us for our iniquities, and will have mercy again. Tob. xiii. 5.

SCOURGER. w. f. [from scourge.] One that scourges; a punisher or chastiser.

To SCOURSE. v. a. To exchange one thing for another; to swap. Answerth.

It seems a corruption of scorsa, Ital.
exchange; and hence a horse scourser.

SCOUT. n. f. [escout, French, from escouter; auscultare, Latin, to listen; scelta, Italian.] One who is sent privily to observe the motions of the enemy.

Are not the speer-scouts return'd again,
That dogg'd the mighty army of the dauphin?
Shaksp.

As when a scout,

Through dark and desert ways with peril gone
All night, at last, by break of cheerful dawn, Obtains the brow of some high-climbing hill. Milt.

This great vessel may have lesser cabins, wherein scouts may be lodged for the taking of observations. Wilkins.

The scouts to several parts divide their way,
To learn the natives names, their towns, explore The coasts. Dryden's Æneid.

To SCOUT. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To go out, in order to observe the motions of an enemy privately.

Off on the bordering deep Encamp their legions; or with obscure wing
Scout far and wide into the realm of night, Scorning surprise. Milton.

As a hunted panther casts about Her glaring eyes, and pricketh her list'ning ears to scout,
So she, to shun his toils, her cares employ'd. Dryd.

Command a party out,
With a strict charge not to engage, but scout. Dry.

2. To ridicule; to sneer. This is a sense unauthorized, and vulgar.

To SCOWL. v. n. [scrylian, to squint, Saxon; scula sig, to look sour, Island-ick.] To frown; to pout; to look angry, sour, or fallen.

Miso, her authority increased, came with scowling eyes to deliver a flattering good-morrow to the two ladies. Sidney.

With bent lowering brows, as she would threat,
She scowl'd and frown'd with froward countenance.
Fairy Queen.

Even so, or with much more contempt, men's eyes

Did scowl on Richard. Shaksp. Richard II.

Not a courtier,
Although they wear their faces to the bent
Of the king's look, but hath a heart that is Glad at the thing they scowl at. Shak. Cymbeline.

The dusky clouds o'erspread
Heav'n's cheerful face; the low'ring element
Scowls o'er the darken'd landscape snow or show'r.
Milton.

Fly, fly, prophane fogs! far hence fly away
With your dull influence; it is for you
To sit and scowl upon night's heavy brow. Craheuz.

In rueful gaze
The cattle stand, and on the scowling heav'n's Cast a despairing eye. Thomson's Summer.

SCOWL. n. f. [from the verb.] Look of fullness or discontent; gloom.

I've seen the morning's lovely ray
Hover o'er the new-born day
With rosy wings so richly bright,
As if he scorn'd to think of night;
When a ruddy storm, whose scowl
Made heav'n's radiant face look foul,
Call'd for an untimely night,
To blot the newly-blossom'd light. Craheuz.

SCOWLINGLY. adv. [from scowl.] With a frowning and sullen look.

To SCRABBLE. v. n. [krabbelen, scrasselen, to scrape or scratch, Dutch.] To paw with the hands.

He feigned himself mad in their hands, and scrabbled on the doors of the gate. 1 Sam. xxi. 13.

SCRAGG. n. f. [scraghe, Dutch.] Any thing thin or lean.

SCRAGGED. adj. [This seems corrupted from cragg'd.] Rough; uneven; full of protuberances or asperities.

Is there then any physical deformity in the fa-brick of a human body, because our imagination can strip it of its muscles and skin, and show us the scragged and knotty back-bone? Bentley's Sermons.

SCRAGGEDNESS. } n. f. [from scragged.] SCRAGGINESS. } n. f. [from scraggy.]

1. Leanness; marcor.
2. Unevenness; roughness; ruggedness.

SCRAGGY. adj. [from scrag.]

1. Lean; marcid; thin.
Such a constitution is easily known, by the body being lean, warm, hairy, scraggy, and dry, without a disease. Arbutnot.

2. [corrupted from craggy.] Rough; rugged; uneven.

From a scraggy rock, whose prominence
Half overthrew the ocean, hardy men,
Fearless of rending winds and dashing waves,
Cut samphire. Philips.

To SCRABBLE. v. n. [the same with scrabble, scrasselen, Dutch.]

1. To catch at any thing eagerly and tu-multuously with the hands; to catch with haste preventive of another; to contend tumultuously which shall catch any thing.

England now is left

To tug and scramble, and to part by th' teeth
The unow'd interest of proud swelling states. Shak.

Of other care they little reck'ning make,
Than how to scramble at the shearer's feast,
And shove away the worthy bidden guest. Milton.
It is not to be supposed, that, when such a tree was shaking, there would be no scrambling for the fruit. Stillingfleet.

They must have scrambled with the wild beasts for crabs and nuts. Ray on the Creation.

2. To climb by the help of the hands: as, he scrambled up that rock.

SCRAMBLE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Eager contest for something, in which one endeavours to get it before another.

As they were in the middle of their gambols, somebody threw a handful of apples among them, that set them presently together by the ears upon the scramble. L'Estrange.

Because the desire of money is constantly almost every where the same, its vent varies very little, but as its greatest scarcity enhances its price, and increases the scramble. Locke.

2. Act of climbing by the help of the hands.

SCRAMBLER. n. f. [from scramble.]

1. One that scrambles.
All the little scramblers after fame fall upon him.
Addison.

2. One that climbs by help of the hands.

To SCRANCH. v. a. [schranzen, Dutch.]
To grind somewhat crackling between the teeth. The Scots retain it.

SCRANNEL. adj. [Of this word I know not the etymology, nor any other example.] Vile; worthless. Perhaps grating by the sound.

When they lift, their lean and flashy songs
Grate on their scrannel pipes of wretched straw.
Milton.

SCRAP. n. f. [from scrape, a thing scraped or rubbed off.]

1. A small particle; a little piece; a fragment.

It is an unaccountable vanity to spend all our time taking into the scraps and imperfect remains of former ages, and neglecting the clearer notices of our own. Glanville.

Trencher esquires spend their time in hopping from one great man's table to another's, only to pick up scraps and intelligence. L'Estrange.

Languages are to be learned only by reading and talking, and not by scraps of authors got by heart. Locke.

No tag, no scrap, of all the beau, or wit,
That once so flatter'd, and that once so writ. Pope.
I can never have too many of your letters: I am angry at every scrap of paper lost. Pope.

2. Crumb; small particles of meat left at the table.

The contract you pretend with that base wretch,
One bred of alms, and foster'd with cold dishes,
With scraps o' th' court, is no contract.
Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

The attendants puff a court up beyond her bounds, for their own scraps and advantage. Bacon.
On bones, on scraps of dogs let me be fed,
My limbs uncovered, and expos'd my head
To bleakst colds. Glanville.

What has he else to bait his traps,
Or bring his vermin in, but scraps?
The offals of a church distress,
A hungry vicarage at best. Swift.

3. A small piece of paper. This is properly scrip.

Pregnant with thousands sits the scrip unseen,
And silent sells a king, or buys a queen. Pope.

To SCRAPE. v. a. [scrapen, Saxon;
schrapen, Dut. schrapenigh, Eric.]

1. To deprive of the surface by the light action of a sharp instrument, used with the edge almost perpendicular.

These hard woods are more properly scraped than planed. Mexon.

2. To take away by scraping; to erase.
They shall destroy the walls, and I will scrape
her dust, and make her like the top of a rock.

Bread for a toast lay on the coals; and, it toasted quite through, scrape off the burnt side, and serve it up. Swift.

3. To act upon any surface with a harsh noise.

The chiming clocks to dinner call;
A hundred footsteps scrape the marble hall. Pope.

4. To gather by great efforts, or penurious or trifling diligence.

Let the government be ruined by his avarice, if by avarice he can scrape together so much as to make his peace. South.

Unhappy those who hunt for a party, and scrape together out of every author all those things only which favour their own tenets. Watts.

To SCRAPE. v. n.

1. To make a harsh noise.
2. To play ill on a fiddle.

3. To make an awkward bow. Ainsworth.

4. To SCRAPE Acquaintance. A low phrase.
To curry favour, or insinuate into one's familiarity: probably from the scrapers or bows of a flatterer.

SCRAPE. n. f. [skrap, Swedish.]

1. Difficulty; perplexity; distress. This is a low word.

2. The sound of the foot drawn over the floor.

3. A bow.

SCRAPER. n. f. [from scrape.]

1. Instrument with which any thing is scraped.

Never clean your shoes on the scraper, but in the entry, and the scraper will last the longer. Swift.

2. A miser; a man intent on getting money; a scrape-penny.

Be thrifty, but not covetous; therefore give Thy need, thine honour, and thy friend his due:
Never was scraper brave-man. Get to live;
Then live, and use it, else it is not true
That thou hast gotten: surely, use alone
Makes money not a contemptible stone. Herbert.

3. A vile fiddler.

Out! ye sempiternal scrappers. Croley.
Have wild boars or dolphins the least emotion at the most elaborate strains of your modern scrappers, all which have been tamed and humanized by ancient musicians? Arbutnot.

SCRAT. n. f. [scutta, Saxon.] An her-maphrodite. Skinner. Junius.

To SCRATCH. v. a. [kratzen, Dutch.]

1. To tear or mark with slight incisions ragged and uneven.

The lab'ring swain
Scratch'd with a rake a furrow for his grain,
And cover'd with his hand the shallow seed again.
Dryden.

A sort of small sand-coloured stones, so hard as to scratch glass. Grew's Museum.

2. To tear with the nails.

How can I tell but that his talons may Yet scratch my son, or rend his tender hand?
Fairy Queen.

I should have scratch'd out your unseeing eyes,
To make my master out of love with thee. Shak.
I had rather hear my dog bark at a crow, than a man swear he loves me.

Keep your ladyship still in that mind; so some gentleman or other shall scratch a predestinate scratch face.

Scratching could not make it worse, as twice such a face is yours now.

Shakespeare's Much ado about Nothing.
Stars are like witches: do but whet your pen,
Scratch till the blood come, they'll not hurt you then. Cleland.

To with that there were nothing but such dull tame things in the world, that will neither bite nor scratch; is as childish as to wish there were no fire in nature. Morr.

Unhand me, or I'll scratch your face;
Let go, for shame. Dryden.

3. To wound slightly.

4. To hunt slightly with any thing pointed or keen.

Daphne, roaming through a thorny wood,
Scratching her legs, that one shall swear she bleeds.
Shakespeare.

5. To rub with the nails.

Francis Cornfield did scratch his elbow, when he had twelvety invented to signify his name St. Francis, with a friary cowl in a corn field. Camden.

Other mechanical helps Artizans use to procure sleep, particularly the scratching of the temples and the ears. Arbutnot.

Be mindful, when invention fails,
To scratch your head, and bite your nails. Swift.

6. To write or draw awkwardly.

If any of their labourers can scratch out a pamphlet, they desire no wit, style, or argument. Swift.

SCRATCH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. An incision ragged and shallow.

The coarse file cuts deep, and makes deep scratches in the work, and before you can take out those deep scratches with your finer cut files, those places where the filings were when your work was forged, may become dens to your hammer dents. Moxon's Mech. Exerciser.

The smaller the particles of those substances are, the smaller will be the scratches by which they continually fret and wear away the glass until it be polished; but be they never so small, they can wear away the glass no otherwise than by grating and scratching it, and breaking the protuberances; and therefore polish it no otherwise than by bringing its roughness to a very fine grain, so that the scratches and frettings of the surface become too small to be visible. Newt. Opt.

2. Laceration with the nails.

These nails with scratches shall deform my breast
Left by my look or colour be express'd
The mark of aught high-born, or ever better dress'd. Prior.

3. A slight wound.

The valiant beast turning on her with open jaws, she gave him such a thrust through his breast, that all the lion could do was with his open paw to tear off the mantle and sleeve of Zelmans;
with a little scratch rather than a wound. Sidney.
Heav'n forbid a shallow scratch should drive
The Prince of Wales from such a field as this.
Shakespeare's Henry IV.

SCRATCHER. n. f. [from scratch.] He that scratches.

SCRATCHES. n. f. Cracked ulcers or scabs in a horse's foot. Ainsworth.

SCRATCHINGLY. adv. [from scratching.]
With the action of scratching.

Making him turn close to the ground, like a cat, when scratchingly the wheels about after a mouse. Sidney.

SCRAW. n. f. [Irish and Erie.] Surface or scurf.

Neither should that odious custom be allowed,
of cutting scraws, which is flaying off the green surface of the ground, to cover their cabins, or make up their ditches. Swift.

To SCRAWL. v. a. [I suppose to be corrupted from scrabble.] To draw or mark irregularly or clumsily.

Peruse my leaves through ev'ry part,
And think thou seest its owner's heart,
Scrawl.

*Scrawl'd o'er with trifles thus, and quite
As hard, as senecioles, and as light.* Swift.

TO SCRAWL, v. n.

1. To write unskilfully and inelegantly.

Think not your verses stealing,
Though with a golden pen you scrawl,
And scribble in a bubble. Swift.

2. [from cratul.] To creep like a reptile.

SCRAWL, n. f. [from the verb.] Unskilful and inelegant writing.

The left hand will make such a scrawl, that it will not be legible. Shutbort's Hist. of John Bull.
Mr. Wycherly, hearing from me how welcome his letters would be, writ to you, in which I inserted my scrawl. Pope.

SCRAWLER, n. f. [from scrawl.] A clumsy and inelegant writer.

SCRAY, n. f. [hirundo marina.] A bird called a sea swallow. Amyas. Bailey.

SCREABLE, adj. [scriabilis, Latin.] That which may be spit out. Bailey.

TO SCRAK, v. n. [properly creak, or skruk, from skrige, Danish.] To make a shrill or hoarse noise. Bailey.

TO SCREAM, v. n. [shreman, Saxon.]

1. To cry out shrilly, as in terror or agony.

Soon a whistle rose around,
And from afar he heard a screaming sound
As of a dame distressed, who cried for aid,
And fill'd with loud laments the secret shade. Dryden.

The fearful matrons raise a screaming cry,
Old feeble men with fainter groans reply;
A jarring sound results, and mingles in the sky. Dryden.

If chance a mouse creeps in her sight,
Can hardly counteract a fright;
So sweetly screams, if it comes near her,
She ravishes all hearts to hear her. Swift.

2. To cry shrilly.

I heard the owl scream, and the crickets cry. Shakespeare.

SCREAM, n. f. [from the verb.] A shrill, quick, loud cry of terror or pain.

Our chinquies were blown down; and, as they say, Lamentings heard I the air, strange screams of death. Shakespeare.

Then flash'd the livid lightning from her eyes,
And screams of horror rend th' affrighted skies. Pope.

TO SCREECH, v. n. [skreakia, to cry, Icelandic.]

1. To cry out as in terror or anguish.

Screeching is an appetite of expelling that which suddenly strikes the spirit. Bacon.

2. To cry as a night owl: thence called a screechowl.

SCREECH, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Cry of horror and anguish.

2. Harsh horrid cry.

The birds, obscene, that nightly flock'd to taste,
With hollow screeches fled from the dire repast,
And ravenous dogs allur'd by scented blood,
And starving wolves, ran howling to the wood. Pope.

SCREECHOWL, n. f. [screech and owl.]

An owl that hoots in the night, and whose voice is supposed to betoken danger, misery, or death.

Deep night,
The time of night when Troy was set on fire,
The time when screechowls cry, and bandogs howl. Shakespeare.

Let him, that will a screechowl as he call'd,
Go into Troy, and say there, Hector's dead. Shakespeare.

By the screechowl's dismal note,
By the black night-raven's throat,
I charge thee, Hob. Dryden.

Jupiter, though he had jogg'd the balance to weigh down Taurus, sent the screechowl to discourage him. Dryden.

Sooner shall screechowls bask in sunny day,
Than I forget my shepherd's wonted love. Gray.

SCREEN, n. f. [esiran, French.]

1. Any thing that affords shelter or concealment.

Now near enough your heavy screen throw down,
And show like those you are. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
Some ambitious men seen as screens to princes in matters of danger and envy. Bacon.
Our people, who transport themselves, are tattered in those intemperate tracts, as a screen against the insults of the savages. Swift.

My juniors by a year,
Who wisely thought my age a screen,
When death approach'd, to stand between;
The screen remov'd, their hearts are trembling. Swift.

2. Any thing used to exclude cold or light.

When there is a screen between the candle and the eye, yet the light passeth to the paper whereon one writeth. Bacon.

One speaks the glory of the British queen,
And one describes a charming Indian screen. Pope.
Ladies make their old clothes into patchwork for screens and stools. Swift.

3. A riddle to sift sand.

TO SCREEN, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To shelter; to conceal; to hide.

Back'd with a ridge of hills,
That screen'd the fruits of th' earth, and seats of men,
From cold Septentrion blasts. Milton's Par. Reg.
A good magistrate's retinue or state screens him from the dangers which he is to incur for the sake of it. Asterbury.

This gentle deed shall fairly be set foremost,
To screen the wild escapes of lawless passion. Rowe.

2. [cerno, cerni, Lat.] To sift; to riddle. Let the cakes be sifted with natural earth, taken the first half spit, from just under the tint of the best pasture-ground, mixed with one part of very mellow soil screened. Evelyn.

SCREW, n. f. [scroove, Dutch; escrow, Fr.]

One of the mechanical powers, which is defined a right cylinder cut into a furrowed spiral: of this there are two kinds, the male and female; the former being cut convex, so that its threads rise outwards; but the latter channelled on its concave side, so as to receive the former. Quincy.

The screw is a kind of wedge that is multiplied or continued by a helical revolution about a cylinder, receiving its motion not from any stroke, but from a twist at one end of it. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

After your apples are ground, commit them to the screw press, which is the best. Mortimer's Husband.

TO SCREW, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To turn or move by a screw.

Some, when the press, by utmost vigour screw'd,
Has drain'd the pulposus mass, regale their swine
With the dry refuse. Philips.

2. To fasten with a screw.

We fail!
But screw your courage to the sticking place,
And we'll not fail. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
To screw your lock on the door, make wide holes, big enough to receive the shank of the screw. Maxon.

3. To deform by contortions.

Sometimes a violent laughter screw'd his face,
And sometimes ready tears dropp'd down apace. Cowley.

He screw'd his face into a harden'd smile,
And said, Sebastian knew to govern slaves. Dryden.
With screw'd face, and doleful whine, they ply you with senseless harangues against human inventions on the one hand, and loud outcries for a further reformation on the other. South.

Let others screw their hypocritical face,
She shews her grief in a sincere place. Swift.

4. To force; to bring by violence.

He resolv'd to govern by subaltern ministers, who screw'd up the pins of power too high. Howell's Vocal Forest.

No discourse can be, but they will try to win the tide, and draw it all into their own channel; or they will screw in here and there some intimations of what they said or did. Gov. Turgot.

The rents of land in Ireland, since they have been so enormously raised and screw'd up, may be computed to be about two millions. Swift.

5. To squeeze; to press.

6. To oppress by extortion.

Our country landlords, by unmeasurable screwing and racking their tenants, have already reduced the miserable people to a worse condition than the peasants in France. Swift.

SCREW TREE, n. f. [ifora, Lat.] A plant of the East and West Indies.

TO SCRIBBLE, v. a. [scribo, scribilla, Latin.]

How gird the sphere
With centrick and eccentric, scribbled o'er Cycle and epicycle, orb in orb. Milton's Par. Lost.

2. To write without use or elegance: as, he scribbled a pamphlet.

TO SCRIBBLE, v. n. To write without care or beauty.

If a man should affirm, that an ape, casually meeting with pen, ink, and paper, and falling to scribble, did happen to write exactly the Leviathan of Hobbes, would an atheist believe such a story? And yet he can easily digest things as incredible as that. Bentley.

If Mævius scribble in Apollo's spite,
There are who judge still worse than he can write. Pope.

Leave flattery to fulsome dedicators,
Whom, when they praise, the world believes no more Than when they promise to give scribbling o'er. Pope.

SCRIBBLE, n. f. [from the verb.] Worthless writing.

By solemnly endeavouring to countenance my conjectures, I might be thought dogmatical in a hasty scribble. Bayle.

If it struck the present taste, it was soon transferred into the plays and current scribbles of the week, and became an addition to our language. Swift.

SCRIBBLER, n. f. [from scribble.] A petty author; a writer without worth.

The most copious writers are the arrantest scribblers, and in so much talking the tongue runs before the wit. LeStrange.

The actors represent such things as they are capable, by which they and the scribbler may get their living. Dryden.

The scribbler, pinch'd with hunger, writes to dine,
And to your genius must conform his line. Granville.

To affirm he had cause to apprehend the same treatment with his father, is an improbable scandal flung upon the nation by a few bigotted French scribblers. Swift.

Nobody was concerned or surprised, if this or that scribbler was proved a dunce. Letter to Pope's Dunciad.

SCRIBE, n. f. [scribe, Fr. scriba, Lat.]

1. A writer.

Hearts, tongues, figures, scribes, bards, poets, cannot Think, speak, cast, write, sing, number, ho!

His love to Antony. Shak. Antony and Cleopatra.
My master, being the scribe to himself, should write the letter. Shakespeare.

We are not to wonder, if he thinks not fit to make any perfect and unerring scribes. Grew's Cymologia.

The following letter comes from some notable young female scribe.

2. A publick notary. Swift.
SCRIMER. n. f. [escrimeur, French.] A gladiator; a fencing-master. Not in use.

The scrimers of their nation,
He swore, had neither motion, guerd, nor eye,
If you oppos'd them. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

SCRINE. n. f. [serinium, Lat.] A place in which writings or curiosities are repositied.

Help then, O holy virgin,
Thy weaker novice to perform thy will;
Lay forth, out of thine everlasting scrine,
Thy antique roll, which there lie hidden still.

Fairy Queen.

SCRIP. n. f. [scrappa, Islandick.]

1. A small bag; a fatchel.

Come, shepherd, let us make an honourable retreat; though not with bag and baggage, yet with scrip and scrippage.

He'd in requital ope his leathern scrip,
And shew me trophies of a thousand names,
Telling their strange and vigorous faculties. Milton.

2. [from scriptio, Latin, as it seems] A schedule; a small writing.

Call them man by man, according to the scrip.

Shakespeare.

Bills of exchange cannot pay our debts abroad, till scrips of paper can be made current coin. Locke.

SCRIPPAGE. n. f. [from scrip.] That which is contained in a scrip. Dick.

SCRIPTOR. adj. [scriptarius, Latin.] Written; not orally delivered. Swift.

SCRIPTURAL. adj. [from scriptura.] Contained in the Bible; biblical.

Creatures, the scriptural use of that word determines it sometimes to men. Atterbury.

SCRIPTURE. n. f. [scriptura, Latin.]

1. Writing.

It is not only remembered in many scriptures, but famous for the death and overthrow of Crafus. Raleigh.

2. Sacred writing; the Bible.

With us there is never any time bestowed in divine service, without the reading of a great part of the holy scripture, which we account a thing most necessary. Hooker.

The devil can cite scripture for his purpose;
An evil soul producing holy witness.

Is like a villain with a smiling cheek. Shakespeare.

There is not any action which a man ought to do, or to forbear, but the scripture will give him a clear precept, or prohibition, for it. South.

Forbear any discourse of other spirits, till his reading the scripture history put him upon that enquiry. Locke.

Scripture proof was never the talent of these men, and 'tis no wonder they are soiled. Atterbury.

Why are scripture maxims put upon us, without taking notice of scripture examples, that lie cross them? Atterbury.

The Author of nature and the scriptures has expressly enjoined, that he who will not work shall not eat. Seed's Sermons.

SCRIVENER. n. f. [scrivano, Latin.]

1. One who draws contracts.

We'll pass the business privately and well;
Send for your daughter by your servant here,
My boy shall fetch the scrivener.

Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.

2. One whose business is to place money at interest.

How happy in his low degree,
Who leads a quiet country life,
And from the griping scrivener free!

Dryden's Horace.

I am reduced to beg and borrow from scrivener and usurers that suck the heart and blood.

Arbutnot's Hist. of John Bull.

SCROFULA. n. f. [from scrofa, Latin, a sow, as scrofae.] A depravation of the humours of the body, which breaks out in sores, commonly called the king's evil.

It matters in the milk dispose to coagulation, it produces a scrofula. Wise man of Tumours.

SCROFULOUS. adj. [from scrofula.] Diseased with the scrofula.

Scrofulous persons can never be duly nourished; for such as have tumours in the parotides often have them in the pancreas and mesentery.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

English consumptions generally proceed from a scrofulous disposition. Arbutnot.

What would become of the race of men in the next age, if we had nothing to trust to, beside the scrofulous consumptive production furnished by our men of wit and pleasure? Swift.

SCROLL. n. f. [supposed by Minshew to be corrupted from roll; by Skinner derived from an escroulle given by the heralds: whence parchment, wrapped up into a resembling form, has the same name. It may be observed, that a gaoler's list of prisoners is escrou.] A writing wrapped up.

His chamber all was hang'd about with rolls,
And old records from ancient times deriv'd;
Some made in books, some in long parchment scrolls,
That were all worm-eaten, and full of canker holes.

Spenser.

We'll add a royal number to the dead,
Gracing the scroll, that tells of this war's loss,
With slaughter coupled to the name of kings.

Shakespeare.

Here is the scroll of every man's name, which is thought fit through all Athens to play in our interlude. Shakespeare.

A Numidian priest, bellowing out certain superstitious charms, cast divers scrolls of paper on each side the way, wherein he cursed and banned the Christians. Knolles.

He drew forth a scroll of parchment, and delivered it to our foremost man. Bacon.

Such follow him, as shall be register'd;
Part good, part bad; of bad the longer scroll. Milt.

With this epistolary scroll,
Receive the partner of my inmost soul.

Prior.

Yet, if he wills, may change or spoil the whole;
May take yon beauteous, mystick, starry roll,
And burn it like an useless parchment scroll. Prior.

SCROYLE. n. f. [This word I remember only in Shakespeare: it seems derived from escroulle, French, a scrofulous swelling; as he calls a mean fellow a scab from his itch, or a patch from his raggedness.] A mean fellow; a rascal; a wretch.

The scroyles of Angiers flout you kings,
And stand securely on their battlements,
As in a theatre. Shakespeare's King John.

TO SCRUB. v. n. [schrobben, Dutch.] To rub hard with something coarse and rough.

Such wrinkles as a skilful hand would draw
For an old grandam ape, when with a grace
She sits at squat, and scrubs her leathern face.

Dryden.

She never would lay aside the use of brooms and scrubbing brushes. Arbutnot.

Now Moll had whirl'd her mop with dextrous air, Prepar'd to scrub the entry and the stairs. Swift.

SCRUB. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A mean fellow, either as he is supposed to scrub himself for the itch, or as he is employed in the mean offices of scouring away dirt.

2. Any thing mean or despicable.

With a dozen large vessels my vault shall be stor'd;
No little scrub join shall come on my board. Swift.

3. A worn-out broom. Answorth.

SCRUBB. adj. [scruber, Dan.] Mean; vile; worthless; dirty; sorry.

I gave it to a youth,
A kind of boy, a little scrubbed boy,
No higher than thyself. Shak. Merchant of Venice.

The scrubbiest cur in all the pack

Can set the mistiff on your back. Swift.

The scene a wood, produc'd no more

Than a few scrubby trees before. Swift.

SCRUFF. n. f. The same, I suppose, with scurf, by a metathesis usual in pronunciation.

SCRUPLE. n. f. [scrupule, French; scrupulus, Lat.]

1. Doubt; difficulty of determination; perplexity: generally about minute things.

Macduff, this noble passion,
Child of integrity, hath from my soul
Wip'd the black scruple, reconcil'd my thoughts
To your good truth. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Nothing did more fill foreign nations with admiration of his succession, than the consent of all estates of England for the receiving of the king without the least scruple, pause, or question. Bac.

For the matter of your confession, let it be severe and serious; but yet so as it may be without any inordinate anxiety, and unnecessary scruples, which only entangle the soul. Taylor.

Men make no scruple to conclude, that those propositions, of whose knowledge they can find in themselves no original, were certainly the impressions of God and nature upon their minds, and not taught them by any one else. Locke.

2. Twenty grains; the third part of a dram.

Milk one ounce, oil of vitriol a scruple, doth coagulate the milk at the bottom, where the vitriol goeth. Bacon.

3. Proverbially, any small quantity.

Nature never lends
The smallest scruple of her excellence;
But, like a thrifty goddess, she determines Herself the glory of a creditor.

Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

TO SCRUPLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To doubt; to hesitate.

He scrupled not to eat
Against his better knowledge; not deceiv'd,
But fondly overcome with female charms.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

SCRUPLER. n. f. [from scruple.] A doubter; one who has scruples.

The scruples which many publick ministers would make of the worthiness of parents to have their children baptized, forced such questioned parents, who did not believe the necessity of having their children baptized by such scruplers, to carry their children unto other ministers.

Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

SCRUPULOSITY. n. f. [from scrupulous.]

1. Doubt; minute and nice doubtfulness.

The one sort they warned to take heed, that scrupulosity did not make them rigorous in giving unadvised sentence against their brethren which were free; the other, that they did not become scandalous, by abusing their liberty and freedom to the offence of their weak brethren, which were scrupulous. Hooker.

So careful, even to scrupulosity, were they to keep their sabbath, that they must not only have a time to prepare them for that, but a further time also to prepare them for their very preparations. South.

2. Fear of acting in any manner; tenderness of conscience.

The first sacrifice is looked on with horror; but when they have made the breach, their scrupulosity soon returns.

Decay of Piety.

SCRUPULOUS.

SCRUPULOUS. adj. [scrupuleux, French; scrupulosus, Latin; from scruple.]

1. Nicely doubtful; hard to satisfy in determinations of conscience.

They warned them, that they did not become scandalous, by abusing their liberty to the offence of their weak brethren, which were scrupulous.

Some birds, inhabitants of the waters, whose blood is cold and thick, and their flesh is so like in taste, that the scrupulous are allowed them on fish-days.

2. Given to objections; captious.

Equality of two domestic pow'rs Breeds scrupulous faction. Shak. Ant. and Cleopatra.

3. Nice; doubtful.

As the cause of a war ought to be just, so the justice of that cause ought to be evident, not obscure, not scrupulous.

4. Careful; vigilant; cautious.

I have been the more scrupulous and wary, in regard the inferences from these observations are of importance.

SCRUPULOUSLY. adv. [from scrupulous.] Carefully; nicely; anxiously.

The duty consists not scrupulously in minutes and half hours.

Henry V. manfully derived his courage from his piety, and was scrupulously careful not to ascribe the success of it to himself.

SCRUPULOUSNESS. n. f. [from scrupulous.]
The state of being scrupulous.

SCRUTABLE. adj. [from scrutator, Latin.]
Discoverable by inquiry.

Shall we think God to be scrutable, or ourselves so penetrating, that none of his secrets can escape us?

SCRUTATION. n. f. [from scrutator, Latin.]
Search; examination; inquiry.

SCRUTATOR. n. f. [from scrutator, Fr. from scruter, Lat.]
Enquirer; searcher; examiner.

In process of time, from being a simple scrutator, an archdeacon became to have jurisdiction more amply.

SCRUTINEER. n. f. [from scrutator, Latin.]
A searcher; an examiner.

TO SCRUTINIZE. v. a. [from scrutiny.]

SCRUTINIOUS. adj. [from scrutiny.]
Captious; full of enquiries. A word little used.

Age is froward, uneasy, scrutinious,
Hard to be pleas'd, and partitionous. Denham.

SCRUTINY. n. f. [from scrutinium, Latin.]
Enquiry; search; examination with nicety.

In the scrutinies for rig' teousness and judgment, when it is inquired whether such a person be a good man or no, the meaning is not, what does he believe or hope, but what he loves.

I thought thee worth my nearer view
And narrower scrutiny, that I might learn
In what degree or meaning thou art call'd
The Son of God. Milton's Paradise Regained.

They that are designed exactness and deep scrutiny, have taken some one part of nature.

Their difference to measure, and to reach,
Reason will rectified must nature teach;
Of these high scrutinies are subjects fit
Man's all-searching and enquiring wit.

We are admonished of want of charity towards Others, and want of a Christian scrutiny and examination into ourselves.

When any argument of great importance is managed with that warmth which a serious conviction of it generally inspires, sometimes may easily escape, even from a wary pen, which will not bear the test of a severe scrutiny.

Their, coming not within the scrutiny of human senses, cannot be examined by them, or attested by any body.

SCRUTOIRE. n. f. [for scrutoire, or escritoire.] A case of drawers for writings

I locked up these papers in my scrutoire, and my scrutoire came to be unlocked.

TO SCRUIZE. v. a. [perhaps from scrui.]
This word, though now disused by writers, is still preserved, at least in its corruption, to scruize, in the London jargon.] To squeeze; to compress.

Though up he caught him 'twixt his puffed hands,
And having scrui'd out of his carrion corse
The loathful life, now lo's'd from sinful bands,
Upon his shoulders cast a him.

TO SCUD. v. n. [Scutire, Italian; Skutta, Swedish; Skutur, twist, Islandick.] To fly; to run away with precipitation.

The vote was no sooner passed, but away they scudded to the next lake.

The frightened satyr, that in woods delight,
Now into plains with scudded up ear-quake flight;
And scudding thence, while they their horn scud,
About their fires the little sylphs cry.

TO SCUDLE. v. n. [from scud.] To run with a kind of affected haste or precipitation. A low word: commonly pronounced scuttle.

His captain's heart,
In the scuffles of great fights, hath burst
The buckles on his breast. Shak. Ant. and Cleop.

Avowed atheists, placing themselves in the seat of the corner, take much pleasing disartisement, by deriding our eager scuffles about that which they think nothing.

The dog leapt upon the serpent, and tears it to pieces; but in the scuffle the cradle happened to be overturned.

Popish missionaries mix themselves in these dark scuffles, and animate the mob to such outrages and insults.

TO SCUFFLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To fight confusedly and tumultuously.

I must confess I've seen, in former days,
The best knights in the world, and scuffled in some ways.

A gallant man had rather fight to great disadvantages in the field, in an orderly way, than scuffle with an undisciplined rabble.

TO SCULK. v. n. [Sculke, Danish.] To lurk in hiding-places; to lie close.

It has struck on a sudden into such a reputation, that it seems any longer to sculk, but owns itself publicly.

Fearing to be seen, within a bed
Of coleworts he conceal'd his wily head;
Then sculk'd till afternoon, and watch'd his time.

My prophets and my sophists finish'd here
Their civil efforts of the verbal war;
Not so my rabbins and logicians yield;
Retiring still they combat; from the field
Of open arms unwilling they depart,
And sculk behind the subterfuge of art.

No news of Phyl! the bridegroom came,
And thought the bride had sculk'd for shame;
Because her father us'd to say
The girl had such a bashful way.

SEVILIAN. n. f. [from Seville.] A lurker; one that hides himself for shame or mischief.

SCULL. n. f. [It is derived by Skinner from shell, in some provinces called skull; as testa, and testa or teste, signify the head.]

Mr. Lys observes, more satisfactorily, that skola is in Islandick the skull of an animal.]

1. The bone which incases and defends the brain; the arched bone of the head.

Features of the skull are at all times very dangerous, as the brain becomes affected from the pressure.

2. A small boat; a cockboat. [See SCULLER.]

3. One who rows a cockboat.

Like catfish vile, that for misdeed
Rides with his face to rump of speed;
Or rowing skull, he's sail to love,
Look one way and another more.

4. [people, Saxon, an assembly.] In Milton's style, a shoal or vast multitude of fish.

With fry innumerable swarms, and shoals
Of fish, that with their fins and shining scales
Glide under the green wave, in skulls that oft Bank the mid sea.

SCULLCAP. n. f. [scull and cap.]
1. A headpiece.

2. A nightcap.

SCULLER. n. f. [Of this word I know not the etymology. Skola is, in Islandick, a vessel; and esquille, in French, a dish.]

1. A cockboat; a boat in which there is but one rower.

Her soul already was consign'd to fate,
And shivering in the leaky skuller fate.

2. One that rows a cockboat.

SCULLERY. n. f. [from skola, a vessel, Islandick; or esquille, French, a dish.]

The place where common utensils, as kettles or dishes, are cleaned and kept.

Pyrelius was famous for counterfeiting hole things, as pickers, a scullery, and setting rogues together by the ears.

SEVILLION. n. f. [from esquille, French, a dish.] The lowest domestic servant, that washes the kettles and the dishes in the kitchen.

I must, like a whore, unpack my heart with words,
And fall a-cursing like a very dial,
A scullion, eye upon't foh! about my brain.

If the gentleman hath lain there, get the cook, the stable-men, and the scullion, to stand in his way.

TO SCULP. v. a. [sculpo, Latin; sculper, Fr.] To carve; to engrave. A word not in use.

O that the tenor of my just complaint
Were sculp'd with steel on rocks of adamant! Sanders.

SCULPTURE. adj. [sculptilis, Lat.] Made by carving.

In a silver medal is upon one side Moses horned, and on the reverse the commandment against sculptile images.

SCULPTOR. n. f. [Sculptor, Latin; sculpteur, Fr.] A carver; one who cuts wood or stone into images.

Thy shape's in every part
So clean, as might instruct the sculptor's art.

The Latin poets give the epithets of trifidum and trifidum to the thunderbolt, from the sculptors and painters sculpture that lived before death, that has given it three forks. Addison.

SCULPTURE, n. f. [sculptura, Latin; sculpture, Fr.]

1. The art of carving wood, or hewing stone, into images.

Then sculpture and her sister arts revive,
Stones leap'd to form, and rocks began to live.

Pope.

2. Carved work.

Nor did there want

Cornice or freeze with bossy sculptures graven. Miln.

There too, in living sculpture, might be seen

The mad affection of the Cretan queen. Dryden.

3. The art of engraving on copper.

TO SCULPTURE, v. a. [from the noun.]

To cut; to engrave.

Gold, silver, ivory vases sculptur'd high,

There are who have not.

Pope.

SCUM, n. f. [escume, French; schiuma, Italian; scum, Danish; schuym, Dutch.]

1. That which rises to the top of any liquor.

The rest had several offices assign'd;

Some to remove the scum as it did rise,

Others to bear the same away did mind,

And others it to use according to his kind.

Fairy Queen.

The salt part of the water doth partly rise into a scum on the top, and partly goeth into a sediment in the bottom. Bacon.

Gather'd like scum, and settled to itself,
Self-fed and self-confum'd. Milton.

Away, ye scum,

That still rise upmost when the nation boils. Dryd.

They mix a medicine, to foment their limbs,

With scum that on the molten silver swims. Dryd.

2. The dross; the refuse; the recrement; that part which is to be thrown away.

There flocked unto him all the scum of the Irish out of all places, that ere long he had a mighty army. Spenser.

Some forty gentlemen excepted, had we the very scum of the world, such as their friends thought it an exceeding good gain to be discharged of.

Raleigh's Essays.

I told thee what would come

Of all thy vapouring, base scum. Hudibras.

The Scythian and Egyptian scum

Had almost ruin'd Rome. Roscommon.

You'll find, in these hereditary tales,
Your ancestors the scum of broken jalls.

Dryden's Juvenal.

The great and innocent are insulted by the scum and refuse of the people. Addison's Freeholder.

TO SCUM, v. a. [from the noun.] To clear off the scum: commonly written and spoken skim.

A second multitude

Severing each kind, and scum'd the bullion dross. Milton.

Hear, ye sullen powers below;

Hear, ye talkers of the dead!

You that bulging cauldrons blow,

You that scum the molten lead!

Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.

What coals swim upon the top of the brine, Scum off. Mortimer's Husbandry.

SCUMMER, n. f. [escumoir, French.] A vessel with which liquor is scummed, commonly called a skimmer.

SCUPPER HOLES, n. f. [scopen, Dutch, to draw off.] In a ship, small holes on the deck, through which water is carried into the sea. The leathers over those holes are called scupper leathers; and the nails with which they are fastened, scupper nails.

The blood at scupper holes run out. Ward.

Vol. II.

SCURV, n. f. [cramp; Saxon; skurf, Islandick; skurf, Danish; skurf, Swedish; seborst, Dutch.]

1. A kind of dry military scab.

Her crafty head was altogether bald,

And, as in hate of honourable old,

Was overgrown with scurf and filthy scald.

Fairy Queen.

The virtue of his hands

Was lost among Pactus' sands,

Against whose torrent while he swims,

The golden scurf peels off his limbs. Swift.

2. A soil or stain adherent.

Then are they happy, when by length of time

The scurf is worn away of each continued crum,

No speck is left. Dryden.

3. Any thing sticking on the surface.

There stood a hull, whose grisly top

Shone with a glossy scurf. Milton.

Upon throwing in a stone, the water boils; and at the same time are seen little flakes of scurf rising up. Addison.

SCURFINENESS, n. f. [from scurf.] The state of being scurfy.

SCURRIL, adj. [scurrilis, Lat.] Low; mean; grossly opprobrious; lewdly jocose.

With him Patroclus,

Upon a lazy bed, the live-long day

Breaks scurril jests. Shaksp. Troilus and Crisida.

Nothing conduces more to letters than to examine the writings of the ancients, provided the plagues of judging and pronouncing against them be away; such as envy, bitterness, precipitation, impudence, and scurril scoffing. Ben Jonson.

Thou mov'st me more by barely naming him,

Than all thy foul unmanner'd scurril taunts. Dryd.

SCURRILITY, n. f. [scurrilitas, Fr. scurrilitas, Lat.] Grossness of reproach; lewdness of jocularity; mean buffoonery.

Good master Holofemes, purge; so it shall please you to abrogate scurrility. Shakspere.

Banish scurrility and profaneness, and restrain the licentious insolence of poets. Dryden.

SCURRILOUS, adj. [scurrilis, Latin.]

Grossly opprobrious; using such language as only the licence of a buffoon can warrant; lewdly jocular; vile; low.

Scurrilous and more than satirical immodesty.

Hacker.

Let him approach singing. Forewarn him that he use no scurrilous words in's tunes.

Shakspere's Winter's Tale.

How often is a person, whose intentions are to do good by the works he publishes, treated in as scurrilous a manner as if he were an enemy to mankind?

Addison's Freeholder.

Their characters have been often treated with the utmost barbarity and injustice by scurrilous and enraged orators. Swift.

SCURRILOUSLY, adv. [from scurrilous.]

With gross reproach; with low buffoonery; with lewd merriment.

Such men there are, who have written scurrilously against me, without any provocation. Dryd.

It is barbarous incivility, scurrilously to sport with that which others count religion. Tillotson.

SCURRILOUSNESS, n. f. [from scurrilous.]

Scurrility; baseness of manners.

SCURVILY, adv. [from scurvy.] Vilely; basely; coarsely. It is seldom used but in a ludicrous sense.

Look i' your glass now,

And see how scurvily that countenance shews; You would be loth to own it. Ben Jonson's Cataline.

This alters the whole complexion of an action, that would otherwise look but very scurvily, and makes it perfect. South.

The clergy were never more learned, or so scurvily treated. Swift.

SCURVY, n. f. [from scurf. This word was, I believe, originally an adjective.]

The scurvy is a distemper of the inhabitants of cold countries; and amongst those such as inhabit marshy, fat, low, moist soils, near stagnating waters, fresh or salt, invading chiefly in the winter such as are sedentary, or live upon salted or smoked flesh and fish, or quantities of unfermented fattinous vegetables; and drink bad water. Arbuthnot.

SCURVY, adj. [from scurf, scurfy, scurvy.]

1. Scabbed; covered with scabs; diseased with the scurvy.

Whatever man be scurvy or scabbed.

Luc. xxi. 20.

2. Vile; bad; sorry; worthless; contemptible; offensive.

I know him for a man divine and holy;

Not scurvy, nor a temporary meddler. Shaksp.

This is a very scurvy tune to sing to a man's funeral. Shakspere.

He spoke scurvy and provoking terms

Against your honour. Shakspere.

A crane, which is but scurvy meat, lays but two eggs. Chapman.

It would be convenient to prevent the excess of drink, with that scurvy custom of taking tobacco.

Swift.

SCURVYGRASS, n. f. [scurvy and grass; cochlearia, Lat.] The sp. onwort. A plant. Miller.

SCUSES. For excuses.

I shifted him away,

And laid good scuses on your ecstasy. Shak. Othello.

SCURT, n. f. [skort, Islandick.] The tail of those animals whose tails are very short, as a hare.

In the hate it is averfely feared, and in its distention inclines unto the coxins or scurs.

Brown's Vulgar Errours.

He fled to earth, but first it cost him dear;

He left his scurt behind, and half an ear. Swift.

SCUTCHEON, n. f. [scutcheon, Italian; from scutum, Lat.] The shield represented in heraldry; the ensigns armorial of a family. See ESCUTCHEON.

And thereto had the that scutcheon of her desires, supported by certain badly diligent ministers. Shaksp.

Your scutcheons, and your signs of conquest, shall Hang in what place you please.

Shaksp. Antony and Cleopatra.

Honour is a meer scutcheon. Shak. Henry IV.

The chiefs about their necks the scutcheons wore, With orient pearls and jewels powder'd o'er. Dryd.

SCUTELLATED, adj. [scutella, Latin.] Divided into small surfaces.

It seems part of the scutellated bone of a surgeon, being flat, of a porous or cellular constitution. Woodward.

SCUTIFORM, adj. [scutiformis, Latin.]

Shaped like a shield.

SCUTTLE, n. f. [scutella, Lat. scutell, Celt. Ainsworth.]

1. A wide shallow basket, so named from a dish or platter, which it resembles in form.

A scuttle or skrein to rid soil from the corn. Tusser.

The earth and stones they are fain to carry from under their feet in scuttles and baskets.

Hakewill on Providence.

2. A small grate.

To the hole in the door have a small scuttle, to keep in what mice are there. Mortimer's Husbandry.

3. [from scud.] A quick pace; a short run; a pace of affected precipitation. This is properly scaddle.

She went with an easy scuttle out of the shop. Spenser.

Spenser.

E

SEATTLE. v. n. [from stead or stead.] To run with affected precipitation. The old fellow fustled out of the room. Arbutnot.
SEASION. v. a. Spenser. Sarguare, Ital. Milton, for disdain.
 Lured up to high, Milton.
SEIGNIFUL. adj. Contracted for disdainful.
 They now, put up with disdainful insolence, Despise the bliss of blessed sapience. Spenser.

SEA. n. f. [Fr. Sax. see, or see, Dutch.]
 1. The ocean; the water, opposed to the land.
 Will all great Neptune's ocean wash this blood Clean from my hand? No, this my hand will rather Thy multitudinous sea incarnadine, Making the green one red. Shaksp. Macbeth
 The rivers run into the sea. Carow.
 He made the sea, and all that is therein. Exod. xx. 11.
 So do the winds and thunders cleanse the air,
 So working seas settle and purge the wine. Davies.
 Amphibious, between sea and land,
 The river horse. Milton.

Some leviathan,
 Happly slumbering on the Norway foam,
 The pilot of some small night-founder'd skiff
 Deeming some island, oft as seamen tell,
 With fixed anchor in his scaly rind,
 Moors by his side under the lee, while night
 Invests the sea. Milton.
 Small fragments of shells, broken by storms on
 Some shores, are used for manuring of sea land. Woodward.
 They put to sea with a fleet of three hundred fail. Arbutnot.
 Sea racing dolphins are train'd for our motion,
 Moony tides swelling to roll us ashore. Dryden's Albion.
 But like a rock unmov'd, a rock that braves
 The raging tempest, and the rising waves,
 Propp'd on himself he stands: his solid sides
 Wash off the sea weeds, and the sounding tides. Dryden.
 The sea could not be much narrower than it is,
 without a great loss to the world. Bensley.
 So when the first bold vessel dar'd the seas,
 High on the stern the Thracian rais'd his strain,
 While Argus saw her kindred trees
 Descend from Pelion to the main. Pope.

2. A collection of water; a lake.
 By the sea of Galilee. Mat. iv. 18.
 3. Proverbially for any large quantity.
 That sea of blood, which hath in Ireland been barbarously shed, is enough to drown in eternal infamy and misery the malicious author and instigator of its effusion. King Charles.
 4. Any thing rough and tempestuous.
 To sorrow abandon'd, but worse felt within,
 And in a troubled sea of passion torn. Milton.

5. Half seas over. Half drunk.
 The whole magistracy was pretty well disguised, before I gave 'em the ship; our friend the alderman was half seas over before the bonfire was out. Spitt.
SEA is often used in composition, as will appear in the following examples.

SEABAR. n. f. [from sea and bar; hirundo
pisces, Lat.] The sea-swallow.
SEABEAT. adj. [from sea and beat.] Dashed by the waves of the sea.
 The lover of the seas he blames in vain,
 That once seabeat will chase again. Spenser's Pass.
 Darkness cover'd o'er
 The face of things; along the seabeat shore
 We slept. Pope's Odyssey.

SEACOW. n. f. [from sea and cow.] Vessel capable to bear the sea.
 The seas were occasioned by their ships being seabeat, and themselves but indifferent seabeat. Arbutnot.

Bitterns, herons, and seagulls, are great enemies to fish.

SEAHEDGEHOG, n. f. [from sea and hedgehog] A kind of sea shellfish.

The seahedgehog is inclosed in a round shell, fashioned as a loaf of bread, wrought and pinched, and guarded by an outer skin full of prickles, as the land urchin.

SEAHOG, n. f. [from sea and hog] The porpus.

SEAHOLLY, n. f. [from sea and holly] A plant. The species are, seabully, or eryngo. Common eryngo. The roots of the first are candied, and sent to London for medicinal use, being the true eryngo.

SEAHOLM, n. f. [from sea and holm]

1. A small uninhabited island.

2. Seaholly. A kind of sea weed.

Cornwall bringeth forth greater store of seabulm and samphire than any other county.

SEAHORSE, n. f. [from sea and horse]

1. The seahorse is a fish of a very singular form, as we see it dried, and of the needlefish kind. It is about four or five inches in length, and nearly half an inch in diameter in the broadest part. Its colour, as we see dried, is a deep reddish brown: and its tail is turned round under the belly.

2. The morse.

Part of a large tooth, round and tapering: a tuft of the morse, or walrus, called by some the seahorse.

3. The medical and the poetical seahorse seem very different. By the seahorse Dryden means probably the hippopotamus.

Seahorse, bound'ring in the slimy mud,
Toss'd up their heads, and dash'd the ooze about 'em.

SEAMAID, n. f. [from sea and maid] Mermaid.

Certain stars shot from their spheres,
To hear the seamaids music.

SEAMAN, n. f. [from sea and man]

1. A sailor; a navigator; a mariner.

Beholds the fleet, and hears the seamen shout.

Seamen, through dismal storms, we woe
To pass the oyster-breeding Hel's point.

A stately tomb, whose top a trumpet bore,
A soldier's falchion, and a seaman's oar;
Thus was his friend interr'd.

By undergoing the hazards of the sea, and the company of common seamen, you make it evident you will make no opportunity of rendering yourself foolish.

Had they applied themselves to the increase of their strength by sea, they might have had the greatest fleet, and the most seamen, of any state in Europe.

2. Mermap, the male of the mermaid.

Seals live on land and at sea, and porpoises have the warm blood and intrails of a hog, not to mention mermaids or seamen.

SEAMARK, n. f. [from sea and mark] Point or conspicuous place distinguished at sea, and serving the mariners as directions of their course.

Those white rocks,
Which all along the southern seas coast lay,
Threat'ning unready wreck and rash decay,
He for his safety's sake his seamark made,
And nam'd it Albion.

Though you do see me weapon'd,
Here is my journey's end, here is my butt,
The very seamark of my utmost sail.

They were executed at diverse places upon the seacoast, for seamarks, or light-houses, to teach Perkin's people to avoid the coast.

They are remembered with a brand of infamy first upon them, and set as seamarks for those who observe them to avoid.

SEAMEW, n. f. [from sea and mew] A fowl that frequents the sea.

An island salt and bare,
The haunt of seals, and orcks, and seamews clang.

The chough, the seamew, the loquacious crow, Scream aloft.

SEAMONSTER, n. f. [from sea and monster] Strange animal of the sea.

Seamonsters give suck to their young. Lam. iv. 3.
Where luxury late reign'd, seamonsters whelp.

SEAMOSS, n. f. [from sea and mass; corallium, Lat.] Coral, which grows in the sea like a shrub, and, being taken out, becomes hard like a stone.

SEANAVELWORT, n. f. [from sea and navelwort, Lat.] An herb growing in Syria, by which great cures are performed.

SEANYMPH, n. f. [from sea and nymphe] Goddess of the sea.

Virgil, after Homer's example, gives us a transformation of Aeneas's ships into seanymphe's.

SEANION, n. f. An herb.

SEAOOSE, n. f. [from sea and oose] The mud in the sea of shore.

All seapois, or oozy mud, and the mud of rivers, are of great advantage to all sorts of land.

SEAFAD, n. f. [from sea and fad, Lat.] The star fish.

SEAPANTHER, n. f. [from sea and panther; gobius, Lat.] A fish like a lamprey.

Seashells are great improvers of four or cold lands.

SEASHORE, n. f. [from sea and shore] The coast of the sea.

That seashore where no more world is found,
But foaming billows breaking on the ground.

Fournier gives an account of an earthquake in Peru, that reached three hundred leagues along the seashore.

To say a man has a clear idea of any quantity, without knowing how great it is, is as reasonable as to say he has the positive idea of the number of the sands on the seashore.

SEASICK, adj. [from sea and sick] Sick, as new voyagers on the sea.

She began to be much seasick, extremity of wear, then continuing.

Barbarossa was not able to come on shore, for that he was, as they said, seasick, and troubled with an ague.

In love's voyage, nothing can offend;
Women are never seasick.

Wearied and seasick, when in these confin'd
Now, for thy safety, cares distract my mind.

SEASIDE, n. f. [from sea and side] The edge of the sea.

Their camels were without number, as the land by the seaside.

There disembarking on the green seaside,
We land our cattle, and the spoil divide.

SEASURGEON, n. f. [from sea and surgeon] A chirurgeon employed on shipboard.

My design was to help the seasurgeon.

SEASURROUNDED, adj. [from sea and surround] Encircled by the sea.

To seasurrounded realms the gods assign Small tracts of fertile fawn, the least to mine.

SEATERM, n. f. [from sea and term] Word of art used by the seamen.

I agree with you in your censure of the seaterms in Dryden's Virgil, because no terms of art, or cant words, suit the majesty of epick poetry.

SEAWATER, n. f. [from sea and water] The salt water of the sea.

By digging of pits in the sea-shore, he did frustrate the laborious works of the enemies, which had turn'd the seawater upon the wells of Alexandria.

I bathed the member with seawater.

Seawater has many gross, rough, and earthy particles in it, as appears from its saltness; whereas fresh water is more pure and unmix'd.

SEAWITHWIND, n. f. [from sea and withwind, Lat.] Bindweed.

SEA-ORCHARD. n. f. [sea and orchard;
searphium, Lat.] A sort of wormwood that grows in the sea.

SEAL. n. f. [phoca; reol, rele, Saxon;
sel, Danish.] The sea calf.

The seal or foyle is in make and growth not unlike a pig, ugly faced, and footed like a moldwarp;
he delighteth in music, or any loud noise, and thereby is trained to shew himself above water:
they also come on land. Carew.

An island salt and bare,
The haunt of seals, and orcles, and seamews clang. Milton.

SEAL. n. f. [sigel, Sax. sigillum, Lat.]

1. A stamp engraved with a particular impression, which is fixed upon the wax that closes letters, or affixed as a testimony.

The king commands you
To render up the great seal. Shakspeare Henry VIII.
If the organs of perception, like wax overhardened with cold, will not receive the impression of the seal; or, like wax of a temper too soft, will not hold it; or else supposing the wax of a temper fit, but the seal not applied with a sufficient force to make a clear impression: in any of these cases, the print left by the seal will be obscure. Locke.

The same his grandfire wore about his neck
In three seal rings; which after, melted down, Form'd a vast buckle for his widow's gown. Pope.

2. The impression made in wax.

Will thou canst rail the seal from off my bond,
Thou but offend'st thy lungs to speak so loud. Shakspeare.

Solveman shewed him his own letters, asking him if he knew not that hand, and if he knew not that seal? Knolles.

He saw his monkey picking the seal wax from a letter. Arbutnot.

3. Any act of confirmation.

They their fill of love
Took largely, of their mutual guilt the seal. Milt.

SEAL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fasten with a seal.

He that brings this love to thee,
Little knows this love in me;
And by him seal up thy mind. Shakspeare As you like it.

I have seen her rise from her bed, take forth paper, fold it, write upon 't, and afterwards seal
it. Shakspeare.

2. To confirm or attest by a seal.

They call it thunder of the second-rate.

Addison's Ovid.

2. [It is sometimes used adjectively.] One of the second order; a colloquial licence.

He was not then a second-rate champion, as they would have him, who think fortitude the first virtue in a hero.

Dryden.

SE'CRECY. n. f. [from secret.]

1. Privacy; state of being hidden; concealment.

That's not suddenly to be perform'd,

But with advice and silent secrecy.

Shak. Hen. VI.

The lady Anne,

Whom the king hath in secrecy long married,

This day was view'd in open as his queen.

Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

In Nature's book of infinite secrecy

A little can I read.

Shak. Antony and Cleopatra.

2. Solitude; retirement; not exposure to view.

Thou in thy secrecy, although alone,

Best with thyself accompanied, seek'st not

Social communication.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

There is no such thing as perfect secrecy, to encourage a rational mind to the perpetuation of any base action; for a man must first extinguish and put out the great light within him, his conscience; he must get away from himself, and shake off the thousand witnesses which he always carries about him, before he can be alone.

South's Sermons.

3. Forbearance of discovery.

It is not with publick as with private prayer: in this rather secrecy is commanded than outward shew; whereas that, being the public act of a whole society, requireth accordingly more care to be had of external appearance.

Hobbes.

4. Fidelity to a secret; taciturnity inviolate; close silence.

For secrecy no lady closer.

Shakespeare

Secrecy and fidelity were their only qualities.

Burnet.

that consists in separating the various fluids of the body.

2. The fluid secreted.

SE'CRETIST. n. f. [from secret.] A dealer in secrets.

Some things I have not yet thought fit so plainly to reveal; not out of any envious design or having them buried with me, but that I may barter with those secrests, that will not part with one secret but in exchange for another.

Boyle.

SE'CRETIOUS. adj. [from secretus, Latin.] Parted by animal secretion.

They have a similitude or contrariety to the secretious humours in taste and quality.

1. Privately; privily; not openly; not publicly; with intention not to be known.

Give him this letter, do it secretly.

Shakespeare.

Now secretly with inward grief he pin'd;

Now warm relements to his grief he join'd.

Addison.

Some may place their chief satisfaction in giving secretly what is to be distributed; others, in being the open and avowed instruments of making such distributions.

Aliterbury.

2. Latently; so as not to be obvious; not apparently.

Those thoughts are not wholly mine; but either they are secretly in the poet, or may be fairly deduced from him.

Dryden.

SE'CRETNESS. n. f. [from secret.]

1. State of being hidden.

2. Quality of keeping a secret.

Lea.

I could murder up
My plants and my witches too,
Which are vast constancy and secretness. Donne
SECRETORY. adj. [from secretus, Latin.] Performing the office of secretion, or animal separation.

All the glands are a congeries of vessels complicated together, whereby they give the blood time to separate through the capillary vessels into the secretory, which afterwards exonerate themselves into one duct. Ray.

SECT. n. f. [secte, French; secta, Latin, from seclando.]

1. A body of men following some particular master, or united in some settled tenets. Often in a bad sense.

We'll wear out,
In a wall'd prison, picks and sects of great ones,
That ebb and flow by th' moon. Shak. K. Lear.
The greatest vicissitude of things is the vicissitude of sects: and religions: the true religion is built upon a rock; the rest are tossed upon the waves of time. Bacon's Essays.

The jealous sects, that dare not trust their cause
So far from their own will as to the laws,
You for their empire and their synod take. Dryd.
The academics were willing to admit the goods of fortune into their notion of felicity; but no sects of old philosophers did ever leave a room for greatness. Dryden.

A sect of freethinkers is a sum of cyphers.

2. In Shakespeare, it seems to be misprinted for ser.

Of our unbitted lusts, I take this that you'll love to be a sect or cion. Shakespeare's Othello.

SECTARISM. n. f. [from sect.] Disposition to petty sects, in opposition to things established.

Nothing hath more marks of schism and sectarism than this presbyterian way. King Charles.

SECTARY. n. f. [sectaire, French; from
sect.]

1. One who divides from publick establishment, and joins with those distinguished by some particular whims.

My lord, you are a sectary;
That's the plain truth. Shakespeare.

Romish catholic tenets are inconsistent, on the one hand, with the truth of religion professed and protected by the church of England, whence we are called protestants; and the anabaptist, and separatists, and sectaries, on the other hand, whose tenets are full of schism, and inconsistent with monarchy.
Bacon.

The number of sectaries does not concern the clergy in point of interest or consequence. Swift.

2. A follower; a pupil.
The sectaries of my celestial skill,
That want to be the world's chief ornament,
They under keep. Spenser.

SECTATOR. n. f. [sectateur, Fr. sectator, Latin.] A follower; an imitator; a disciple.

Heroes the wiser sort and the best learned philosophers were not ignorant, as Cicero witnesseth, gathering the opinion of Aristotle and his sectators.
Raleigh.

SECTION. n. f. [section, French; sectio, Latin.]

1. The act of cutting or dividing.
In the section of bodies, man, of all sensible creatures, has the tallest brain to his proportion. Wotton.

A part divided from the rest.

A small and distinct part of a writing or book.

Instead of their law, which they might not read easily, they read, of the prophets, that which in likewise of matter came next to the section of their law. Hooker.

The production of volatile salts I reserve till I mention them in another section. Boyle.
Without breaking in upon the connection of his language, it is hardly possible to give a distinct view of his several arguments in distinct sections.
Locke.

SECTOR. n. f. [secteur, French.] In geometry.

Sector is an instrument made of wood or metal, with a joint, and sometimes a piece to turn out to make a true square, with lines of sines, tangents, secants, equal parts, rhumbs, polygons, hours, latitudes, metals, and solids. It is generally useful in all the practical parts of the mathematics, and particularly contrived for navigation, surveying, astronomy, dialling, and projection of the sphere.
All the lines of the sector can be accommodated to any radius, which is done by taking off all divisions parallelwise, and not lengthwise; the ground of which practice is this, that parallels to the base of any plain triangle bear the same proportion to it as the parts of the legs above the parallel do to the whole legs. Harris.

SE'CLAR. adj. [seclarius, Latin; seculier,
French.]

1. Not spiritual; relating to affairs of the present world; not holy; worldly.

This, in every several man's notions of common life, appertaineth unto moral, in publick and politic seclar affairs, unto civil wisdom. Hooker.

Then shall they seek to avail themselves of names,
Places, and titles; and with these to join
So seclar power, though reigning still to act
By spiritual. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. [In the church of Rome.] Not bound by monastick rules.

Those northern nations easily embraced the religion of those they subdued, and by their devotion gave great authority and reverence, and thereby came to the clergy, both seclar and regular. Temp.

In France vast numbers of ecclesiasticks, seclar and religious, live upon the labours of others.

3. [seculaire, French.] Happening or coming once in a secler or century.

The seclar year was kept but once in a century. Addison.

SECLARITY. n. f. [from seclar.] Worldliness; attention to the things of the present life.

Littleness and seclarity of spirit is the greatest enemy to contemplation. Burn. The. of Earth.

TO SE'CLARIZE. v. a. [seclarius, Fr. from seclar.]

1. To convert from spiritual appropriations to common use.

2. To make worldly.
SECLARLY. adv. [from seclar.] In a worldly manner.

SE'CLARNESS. n. f. [from seclar.]
Worldliness.

SECUNDINE. n. f. [secondines, secondes,
Fr. secundae, viz. partes, quod nascientem infantem sequantur. Ainsw.] The men-brane in which the embryo is wrapped;
the after birth.

The casting of the skin is by the ancients compared to the breaking of the secundine, or cawl, but not rightly; for the secundine is but a general cover, not shaped according to the parts, but the skin is. Bacon's Natural History.

Future ages lie
Wrapp'd in their sacred secundine sleep. Cowley.

If the fetus be taken out of the womb inclosed in the secundine, it will continue to live, and the blood to circulate. Ray.

SECURE. adj. [from securus, Latin.]

1. Free from fear; exempt from terror; easy; assured.

Confidence then bore that on secur
To meet no danger. Milton.

2. Confident; not distrustful; with of.
But thou, secur of soul, unbent with woes,
The more thy fortune frowns, the more oppose.
Dryden.

One maid she had, below'd above the rest;
Secure of her, the secret she confess'd. Dryden.

The portion of their wealth they design for the uses of the poor, they may throw into one of these publick repositories, secur that it will be well employed. Atterbury.

3. Sure; not doubting; with of.
It concerns the most secur of his strength, to pray to God not to expose him to an enemy. Rogers.
In Lethe's lake souls long oblivion taste;
Of future life secur, forgetful of the past. Dryd.

Haply too secur of our discharge
From penalty. Bd on.

We live and act as if we were perfectly secur of the final event of things, however we may behave ourselves. Atterbury.

4. Careless; wanting caution; wanting vigilance.

Guided smote the host, for the host were secur.
Judges.

5. Free from danger; safe.

Let us not then suspect our happy state,
As not secur to single or combin'd. Milton.

Secure of steel, and fated from the fire,
In pomp appears. Dryden.

Secure from fortune's blows,
Secure of what I cannot lose,
In my small pinnacle I can sail. Dryd. Horat.

6. It has sometimes of before the object in all its senses; but more properly from before evil, or the cause of evil.

TO SECURE. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To make certain; to put out of hazard; to ascertain.

Nothing left
That might his happy state secur,
Secure from outward force. Milton.

Actions have their preference, not according to the transient pleasure or pain that accompanies or follows them here, but as they serve to secur that perfect durable happiness hereafter. Locke.

Truth and certainty are not *secur*ed by innate principles; but men are in the same uncertain floating estate with as without them. Locke.

That prince, who shall be to wife as by established laws of liberty, to secur protection to the honest industry of mankind against the oppression of power, will quickly be too hard for his neighbours.
Locke.

Deeper to wound, she shuns the sight;
She drops her arms to gain the field;
Secures her conquest by her flight,
And triumphs when she seems to yield. Prior.

Nothing can be more artful than the address of Ulysses: he *secur*s himself of a powerful advocate, by paying an ingenious and laudable deference to his friend. Brome.

2. To protect; to make safe.

I spread a cloud before the victor's sight,
Sustain'd the vanquish'd, and *secur*d his flight;
E'en then *secur*d him, when I fought with joy
The vow'd destruction of ungrateful Troy. Dryd.

Where two or three sciences are pursued at the same time, if one of them be dry, as logic, let another be more entertaining, to secur the mind from weariness. Wotton.

3. To insure.

SECURELY. adv. [from secur.]

1. Without fear; carelessly.

Love, that had now long time *secur*ly slept
In Venus' lap, awakened then and naked,
'Gan rear his head, by Clotho being waked. Spens.

'Tis

In done like Hector, but securely doing
A little proudly, and great deal misdoing.
The knight oppos'd. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.
His daring for securely than defy.
A soul that can securely death defy,
And count it nature's privilege to die. Dryden.
Whether any of the reasonings are inconsistent,
I securely leave to the judgment of the reader.
Atterbury.

2. Without danger; safely.
We upon our globe's last verge shall go,
And view the ocean leaping on the sky;
From thence our rolling neighbours we shall know,
And on the lunar world securely pry. Dryden.

SECUREMENT. n. s. [from secure.] The cause of safety; protection; defence.
They, like Judas, desire death; Cain, on the contrary, grew afraid thereof, and obtained a securement from it. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

SECURITY. n. s. [Securité, Fr. securitas,
Lat. from secure.]

1. Carelessness; freedom from fear.
Marvellous security is always dangerous, when men will not believe any bees to be in a hive, until they have a sharp sense of their stings. Hayward.

2. Vitious carelessness; confidence; want of vigilance.
How senseless then and dead a soul hath he,
Which thinks his soul doth with his body die;
Or thinks not so, but so would have it be,
That he might sin with more security? Davies.

3. Protection; defence.
If the providence of God be taken away, what security have we against those innumerable dangers to which human nature is continually exposed?
Tillotson.

4. Any thing given as a pledge or caution; insurance; assurance for any thing; the act of giving caution, or being bound.

There is security truth enough alive to make societies secure; but security enough to make fellowships accurst. Shakespeare.

When they had taken security of Jason, they let them go. Acts, xvii. 9.

It is possible for a man, who hath the appearance of religion, to be wicked and an hypocrite;
but it is impossible for a man, who openly declares against religion, to give any reasonable security that he will not be false and cruel. Swift.

Exchequer bills have been generally reckoned the surest and most sacred of all securities.
Swift's Examiner.

The Romans do not seem to have known the secret of paper credit, and securities upon mortgages.
Arbutnot on Coins.

5. Safety; certainty.
Some, who gave their advice for entering into a war, alleged that we should have no security for our trade, while Spain was subject to a prince of the Bourbon family. Swift.

SEDAN. n. s. A kind of portable coach;
a chair. I believe because first made at Sedan.

Some beg for absent persons, feign them sick,
Close mew'd in their sedans for want of air,
And for their wives produce an empty chair. Dryd.
By a tax of Cato's it was provided, that women's wearing cloaths, ornaments, and sedan, exceeding 12*l.* 1*s.* 6*d.* halfpenny, should pay for, in the hundred pound value. Arbutnot.

SEDATE. adj. [sedatus, Lat.] Calm; quiet; still; unruffled; undisturbed;
serene.

With countenance calm and sedate,
Thus Turnus. Dryden's Æneid.
Disputation carries away the mind from that calm and sedate temper which is so necessary to contemplate truth. Mallet.

SEDATE. adv. [from sedate.] Calmly; without disturbance.

That has most weight with them that appears
sedately to come from their parents' reason. Locke.

SEDATE. n. s. [from sedate.] Calmness; tranquillity; serenity; freedom from disturbance.

There is a particular sedateness in their conversation and behaviour that qualifies them for council, with a great intrepidity that fits them for action.
Addison on the War.

SE'DENTARINESS. n. s. [from sedentary.]
The state of being sedentary; inactivity.

SE'DENTARY. adj. [sedentaire, Fr. se-dentarius, Italian; sedentarius, from sedeo,
Lat.]

1. Passed in sitting still; wanting motion or action.

A sedentary life, appropriate to all students, crushes the bowels; and, for want of stirring the body, suffers the spirits to lie dormant.
Harvey on Consumption.

The blood of labouring people is more dense and heavy than of those who live a sedentary life.
Arbutnot.

2. Torpid; inactive; sluggish; motionless.

The sedentary earth,
That better might with far less compass move,
Serv'd by more noble than herself, attains
Her end without least motion. Milton.

Till length of years,
And sedentary numbness, craze my limbs
To a contemptible old age obscure. Milt. Agon.
The soul, considered abstractedly from its passions, is of a remote sedentary nature, slow in its resolves, and languishing in its executions.
Addison's Spectator.

SEDGE. n. s. [æcg, Saxon; whence, in the provinces, a narrow flag is called a sag or seg.] A growth of narrow flags;
a narrow flag.

The current, that with gentle murmur glides;
Thou know'st, being stopp'd, impatiently doth rage;
But when his fair course is not hindered,
He makes sweet music with th' enamell'd stones,
Giving a gentle kiss to every sedge
He overtaketh in his pilgrimage;
And so by many winding nooks he strays,
With willing sport to the wild ocean. Shakep.

Adonis; painted by a running brook,
And Cytherea all in sedges hid;
Which seem to move and wanton with her breath,
Even as the waving sedges play with wind. Shakep.

In hotter countries a fly called luciole, that shineth as the glowworm, is chiefly upon fens and marshes; yet is not seen but in the height of summer, and sedge or other green of the fens give as good shade as bushes. Bacon.

He hid himself in the sedges adjoining. Sandy.
My bonds I brake,
Fled from my guard, and in a muddy lake,
Amongst the sedges, all the night lay hid. Danbarn.
Niphates, with inverted urn,
And drooping sedge, shall his Armenia mourn. Dryden.

S'PGY. adj. [from sedge.] Overgrown with narrow flags.

On the gentle Severn's sedgey bank,
In single opposition, hand to hand,
He did confound the best part of an hour,
In changing hardiment with great Glendower.
Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Old father Thames rais'd up his reverend head,
But fear'd the fens of Simonds would return;
Deep in the ooze he sought his sedgey bed,
And drunk his waters back into his urn. Dryden.

SE'DIMENT. n. s. [sediment, Fr. sedimentum, Lat.] That which lies or settles at the bottom.

The salt water rises into a kind of foam on the top, and partly goes into a sediment in the bottom.

and is rather a separation than an evaporation.
Bacon's Natural History.
It is not bare agitation, but the sediment at the bottom, that troubles and sickens the water.

That matter sunk got down till last of all, settling at the bottom of the sediments, and covering all the rest. Woodward.

SEDITION. n. s. [sedition, Fr. seditie, Lat.] A tumult; an insurrection; a popular commotion; an uproar.

That sunshine brew'd a show'r for him,
That walk'd his father's fortunes forth of France,
And heap'd sedition on his crown at home. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

In soothing them, we nourish'd 'gainst our sedition
The cockle of rebellion, insurrection, sedition.
Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

SEDITIONOUS. adj. [seditionus, Fr. seditionus,
Lat.] Factions with tumult; turbulent.

The cause why I have brought this army hither,
Is to remove proud Somerset from the king,
Sadickus to his grace and to the state. Shak. H. VI.
Very many of the nobility in Edenborough, at that time, did not appear yet in this seditionous behaviour. Clarendon.

Thou return'st
From flight, sedition angel. Milton.

But if she has deform'd this earthly life
With murderous rapine and sedition strife,
In everlasting darkness must she lie;
Still more unhappy than the wretch that die. Prior.

SEDITIONOUSLY. adv. [from seditionous.]
Tumultuously; with factious turbulency.

SEDITIONOUSNESS. n. s. [from seditionous.]
Turbulency; disposition to sedition.

TO SEDUCE. v. a. [seduco, Lat. seducere, Fr.] To draw aside from the right;
to tempt; to corrupt; to deprave; to mislead; to deceive.

'Tis meet
That noble minds keep ever with their likes;
For who so firm that cannot be seduc'd? Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

Me the gold of France did not seduce,
Although I did admit it as a motive
The stronger to effect what I intended. Shakespeare's Henry V.

A beauty-wailing and distressed widow
Seduc'd the pitch and height of all his thoughts
To base declension. Shakespeare's Richard III.

In the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits. 1 Tim. ii. 14.

I shall never gratify the superstitions of a few with any sinister thoughts of all their allegiances, whom pious friends have seduced. King Charles.

Subtle he needs must be who could seduce
Angels. Milton.

Nor let false friends seduce thy mind to faint;
By arrogating Johnson's hostile name;
Let father Fleckenoe fire the mind with zeal;
And uncle Ogilby thy envy talke. Dryden.

SEDUCEMENT. n. s. [from seduce.] Practice of seduction; art or means used in order to seduce.

To season them, and win them early to the love of virtue and true labour, are any flattering seduce-ment or vain principles; these them wandering, some easy and delightful back of education should be read to them. Milton on Education.

Her hero's dangers touch'd the paying power,
The nymph's seducement, and the magical art. Shak.

SEDUCE. v. a. [from seduce.] One who draws aside from the right; a tempter;
a corrupter.

Grant it me, O king; otherwise a seducer thou fistest, and a poor maid is undone. Shakespeare.

There is a teaching by seducing seducers and in removing the hindrance of knowledge. Shak.

The soft seducer, with smiling looks,
The smiling swain to the light provokes. Dryden.

He, whose firm faith no reason could remove,
Will melt before that soft seducer, love. Dryden.
Seductive. adj. [from seduce.] Cor-ruptible; capable of being drawn aside from the right.

The vicious example of ages past poisons the curiosity of the present, affording a hint of sin unto seducible spirits. Brown.

We owe much of our ruin to the power which our affections have over our so easily seducible understandings. Glennville.

SEDUCTION. n. f. [seduction, Fr. seductus, Lat.] The act of seducing; the act of drawing aside.

Whichever men's faith, patience, or perseverance were, my remarkable indulgence to this sin, the seduction of Balaam, was sure to bring judgments. Hammond.

To procure the mischief of what, to those exemies, wherein we hold as hope to have no society ourselves, is a strain above Lucifer, and a project beyond the primary seduction of hell.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The deceiver soon found out this lost place of Adam's, and discovering itself did not secure him from this way of seduction. Glennville's Success.

Helen describes her seduction to Venus, and mentions nothing of Paris. Pope.

A woman who is above flattery, and despises all praise but that which flows from the approbation of her own heart, is, morally speaking, out of reach of seduction. Glennville.

SEDULITY. n. f. [sedulitas, Lat.] Diligent assiduity; laboriousness; industry;
application; intenseness of endeavour.

Man oftentimes pursues, with great sedulity and earnestness, that which cannot stand him in any stead for vital purpose. Hooker.

Let there be but the same propensity and bent of will to religion, and there will be the same sedu-lity and indefatigable industry in men's enquiry into it. South.

SEDULOUS. adj. [sedulus, Lat.] Assiduous; industrious; laborious; diligent;
painful.

Not sedulous by nature to indite
Wars, hitherto the only argument
Heroick deem'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

What signifies the sound of words in prayer, without the affection of the heart, and a sedulous application of the proper means that may naturally lead us to such an end? L'Estrange.

The goat, now bight amidst her fellow stars,
Kind Amalthæa, teach'd her teat, dissent
With milk, thy early food: the sedulous bee Distill'd her honey on thy purple lips. Prior.

The bare majesty of a false representatives is often procured by great industry and application, wherein those who engage in the pursuits of malice are much more sedulous than such as would prevent them. Swift.

SEDULOUSLY. adv. [from sedulous.] Assiduously; industriously, laboriously;
diligently; painfully.

The ritual, preceptive, prophetick, and all other parts of sacred writ, were most sedulously, most religiously guarded by them. Gov. of the Tongue.

All things by experience
Are most improv'd; then sedulously think
To meliorate thy flock, no way or rule
Be unemploy'd. Philips.

SEDULOUSNESS. n. f. [from sedulous.] Assiduity; assiduousness; industry; diligence.

SEE. n. f. [sedes, Lat.] The seat of episcopal power; the diocese of a bishop.

You, my lord archbishop,
Whose see is by a civil peace maintain'd,
Whose beard the silver hand of peace hath touch'd,
Whose learning and good letters peace hath foster'd,
Whose white investments figure innocence,
The dove and every blessed spirit of peace,

Wherefore do you so ill translate yourself
Out of the speech of peace, that bears such grace,
Into the harsh and batt'ring tongue of war?

It is a safe opinion for their see, empire, and kingdoms; and for themselves, if they be wise.
Shakespeare's Henry IV.

The pope would use these treasures, in case of any great calamity that should endanger the holy see. Addison.

Episcopal revenues were so low reduced, that three or four sees were often united to make a tolerable competency. Swift.

TO SEE. v. a. preter. I saw; part. pass. seen. [from, Saxon; siem, Dutch.]

1. To perceive by the eye.

Dear son Edgar,
Might I but live to see thee in my touch,
I'd say I had eyes again. Shakespeare's King Lear.

I was bow'd down at the hearing of it; I was dismay'd at the seeing of it. Il. xxii. 3.

I speak that which I have seen with my Father:
and ye do that which you have seen with your father.
John, viii. 38.

He'll lead the life of gods, and be
By gods and heroes seen, and gods and heroes see.
Dryden.

It was a right answer of the physician to his patient, that had sore eyes: If you have more pleasure in the taste of wine than in the use of your sight, wine is good for you; but if the pleasure of seeing be greater to you than that of drinking, wine is naught. Locke.

I see her sober over a sampler. Pope.

2. To observe; to find.

Seven other kine came up, lean fleshed, such as I never saw for badness. Gen. xli. 19.

Such command we had,
To see that none thence issued forth a spy. Milton.
Give them first one simple idea, and see that they perfectly comprehend it, before you go any farther.
Locke.

The thunderbolt we see used, by the greatest poet of Augustus's age, to express irresistible force in virtu. Addison.

3. To discover; to descry.

Who is to gross
As cannot see this palpable device?
Yet who so bold but says he sees it not.
When such ill dealings must be seen in thought?
Shakespeare.

4. To converse with

The main of them is to be reduced to language, and to an improvement in wisdom and prudence,
by seeing men, and conversing with people of different tempers and customs. Locke.

5. To attend; to remark.

I had a mind to see him out, and therefore did not care for contradicting him. Addison's Freeholder.

TO SEE. v. n.

1. To have the power of sight; to have by the eye perception of things distant.

Who maketh the seeing or the blind? have not
I, the Lord?
Air hath some secret degree of light; otherwise cats and owls could not see in the night.
Bacon's Natural History.

2. To discern without deception.

Many sagacious persons will find us out, will look under our mask, and see through all our fine pretensions, and discern the absurdity of telling the world that we believe one thing when we do the contrary. Tillotson.

Could you see into my secret soul,
There you might read your own dominion doubled.
Dryden.

You may see into the spirit of them all, and form your pen from those general notions. Felton.

3. To enquire; to distinguish.

See whether thou dost make thee wrong her.
Shakespeare.

4. To be attentive.

Mark and perform it, see'st thou? for the fall
Of any point in it shall be death. Shakespeare.

5. To scheme; to contrive.

Calisto's a proper man: let me see now;
To get his place. Shakespeare's Othello.

SEE. interjection. [originally the imperative of the verb see.] Lo; look; observe; behold.

See! see! upon the banks of Boyne he stands,
By his own view adjusting his commands. Halifax.
See! the vile blif heavy'n could on all bestow,
Which who but fools can taste, but thinks can know. Pope.

See what it is to have a poet in your house. Pope.

SEED. n. f. [from, Saxon; seed, Danish;
saed, Dutch.]

1. The organised particle produced by plants and animals, from which new plants and animals are generated.

If you can look into the seeds of time,
And say which grain will grow and which will not,
Speak then to me. Shakespeare's Much Ado.
Seed of a year old is the best, though some seed and grains last better than others.

Bacon's Natural History.
I hat every plant has its seed, is an evident sign of divine providence. Morse.

Did they ever see any herbs, except those of the grat-leaved tribe, come up without two seed leaves; which to me is an argument that they came all of seed, there being no reason else why they should produce two seed leaves different from the subsequent. Ray.

Just gods! all other things their like produce;
The vine issues from her mother's juice;
When feeble plants or tender flow'rs decay,
They to their seed their images convey. Prior.
In the south part of Staffordshire they go to the north for seed corn. Mortimer.

2. First principle; original.

The seed of whatsoever perfect virtue growth from us, is a right opinion touching things divine.
Hooker.

3. Principle of production.

Praise of great acts he scatters, as a seed
Which may the like in coming ages breed. Waller.

4. Progeny; offspring; descendants.

Next him king Lear in happy peace long reign'd;
But had no illur male him to succeed,
But three fair daughters which were well up-train'd
In all that seemed fit for kingly seed. Fairy Queen.

The thing doth touch
The main of all your states, your blood, your youth.
Daniel.

When God gave Canaan to Abraham, he thought fit to put his seed into the grant too. Locke.

5. Race; generation; birth.

Of mortal seed they were not held,
Which other mortals so excell'd,
And beauty too in such excess
As yours, Zelinda! claims no less. Waller.

TO SEED. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To grow to perfect maturity, so as to shed the seed.

Whate'er I plant, like corn on barren earth,
By an equivocal birth,
Seeds and runs up to poetry. Swift.

2. To shed the seed.

They pick up all the old roots, except what they design for seed, which they let stand to seed the next year. Mortimer.

SEEDCAKE. n. f. [seed and cake.] A sweet cake interspersed with warm aromattick seeds.

Remember, wife,
The seedcake, the pasties, and foumenty pot. Taffer.

SEEDLIP. n. f. A vessel in which the SEEDLING sower carries his seed. Ains.

SEEDPEARL. n. f. [seed and pearl.] Small grains of pearl.

In the dissolution of seedpearl in some acid menstruum, if a good quantity of the little pearls be cast

cast in whole; they will be carried in swarms from the bottom to the top. Bayle.

SEEDPLOT. n. f. [seed and plot.] The ground on which plants are sowed to be afterwards transplanted.

To counsel others, a man must be furnished with an universal store in himself to the knowledge of all nature; that is, the matter and seedplot: there are the seeds of all argument and invention. Ben Jonson.

Humility is a seedplot of virtue, especially Christian, which thrives best when 'tis deep rooted in the humble lowly heart. Hammond.

It will not be unuseful to present a full narration of this rebellion, looking back to those passages by which the seedplots were made and framed, from whence those mischiefs have successively grown. Guerica n.

SEEDTIME. n. f. [seed and time.] The season of sowing.

While the earth remaineth, seedtime and harvest shall not cease. Gen. viii. 22.

If he would have two tributes in one year, he must give them two seedtimes, and two harvests. Bacon.

The first rain fell upon the seedtime about October, and was to make the seed to root; the latter was to fill the ear. Brown.

Day and night, Seedtime and harvest, heat and hoary frost, Shall hold their course till fire purge all things. Milton.

Their very seedtime was their harvest, and by sowing time they immediately reaped gold. Decay of Piety.

He that too curiously observes the face of the heavens, by missing his seedtime, will lose the hopes of his harvest. Asterbury.

SEEDLING. n. f. [from seed.] A young plant just risen from the seed.

Carry into the shade such seedlings or plants as are for their choiceness reserved in pots.  Evelyn's Kalendar.

SEEDNESS. n. f. [from seed.] Seedtime; the time of sowing.

Blossoming time
From the seedness the bare fallow brings To teeming foison. Shaksp. Measure for Measure.

SEEDSMAN. n. f. [seed and man.]

1. The sower; he that scatters the seed.
The higher Nilus swells
The more it promises: as it ebbs, the seedsmen
Upon the flume and oze scatter his grain,
And shortly comes to harvest. Shaksp. Antony and Cleopatra.

2. One that sows seeds.
SEEDY. adj. [from seed.] Abounding with seed.

SEE'ING. n. f. [from see.] Sight; vision.

Love adds a precious seeing to the eye. Shak.

SEE'ING. adv. [vu que, French; vu que, French; seen that, or provided that.] Since; in; it being so that.

Why should not they be as well victualled for so long time as the ships are, usually for a year, seeing it is easier to keep victuals on land than water? Spenser on Ireland.

How shall they have any trial of his doctrine, learning, and ability to preach, seeing that he may not publicly either teach or exhort, because he is not yet called to the ministry? Wright.

Seeing every nation affords not experience and tradition enough for all kind of learning, therefore we are taught the languages of those people who have been most industrious after wisdom. Milton on Education.

Seeing they explained the phenomena of vision, imagination, and thought, by certain thin floors of atoms that flow from the surfaces of bodies, and by their subtlety penetrate any obstacle, and yet retain the exact dimensions of the several bodies from which they proceed: in consequence of this hypothesis they maintained, that we could have no phantasy of any thing, but what did really subsist either inure or in its several parts. Bentley's Sermons.

TO SERK. v. a. pret. I sought; part. pass. sought. [rekan, Sax. soeken, Dutch.]

1. To look for; to search for; often with out.

He did range the town to seek me out. Shaksp.

I have a venturesome fairy, that shall seek
The squirrel's hoard, and fetch thee thence new nurs. Shaksp.

Because of the money returned in our seek, are we brought in, that he may seek occasion against us, and take us for bondmen. Gen. xliii. 18.

He seeketh unto him a cunning workman, to prepare a graven image. Is. xl. 20.

Seek thee a man which may go with thee. Tob. i. 3.

Sweet peace, where dost thou dwell?
I humbly crave,
Let me once know;

I sought thee in a secret cave,
And ask'd if peace we there. Herbert.

The king meant not to seek out nor to decline fighting with them, if they put themselves in his way. Clarendon.

So fatal 'twas to seek temptations out!
Most confidence has still most cause to doubt. Dryden.

We must seek out some other original of power for the government of politics than this of Adam, or else there will be none at all in the world. Locke.

2. To solicit; to endeavour to gain.

Others tempting him, sought of him a sign. Luke, xi. 16.

The young lions roar after their prey, and seek their meat from God. Psal. ciii. 21.

God hath bid dwell far off all anxious cares,
And not molest us, unless we ourselves
seek them with wandering thoughts. Milton.

Of our alliance other lands desir'd,
And what we seek of you, of us requir'd. Dryden.

3. To go to find.

Let us seek death, or, he not found, supply
His office. Milton.

Dardanus, though horn
On Lidian plains, yet sought the Phrygian shore. Dryden.

Like fury seiz'd the rest; the progress known,
All seek the mountains, and forsake the town. Dry.

Since great Ulysses sought the Phrygian plains,
Within these walls inglorious silence reigns. Pope.

Indulge one labour more,
And seek Atreides on the Spartan shore. Pope.

4. To pursue by machinations.

I had a son,
Now outlaw'd from my blood; he sought my life. Shaksp.

David saw that Saul was come out to seek his life. 1 Sam. xxiii. 13.

TO SEEK. v. n.

1. To make search; to make inquiry.

Seek ye out of the book of the Lord, and read. Is. xxxiv. 16.

I have been forced to relinquish that opinion, and have endeavoured to seek after some better reason. Addison's Spectator.

2. To endeavour.

Why should he mean me ill, or seek to harm?
Adrian.

Ask not what pains, nor further seek to know
Their process, or the forms of law below. Dryden.

3. To make pursuit.

Violent men have sought after my soul. Psal. lxxvi. 14.

If thy brother's ox or sheep go astray, it shall be with thee until thy brother seek after it. Deut. xxi. 2.

4. To apply to; to use solicitation.

All the earth sought to Solomon, to hear his wisdom. 1 Kings, ii. 24.

Unto his habitation shall ye seek, and thither shall ye come. Deut. xli. 5.

5. To endeavour after.

Being a man of experience, he wished by wisdom to order that which the young prince sought for by war. Kudlin.

TO SEEK. [an adverbial mode of speech.]

At a loss; without measures, knowledge, or experience.

Being brought and transferred from other services abroad, though they be of good experience in those, yet in these they will be new to seek; and before they have gathered experience, they shall buy it with great loss to his majesty. Spenser.

Unpractis'd, unprepar'd, and still to seek. Milb.

But they replace them all;
And are as much to seek in other things,
As he that only can design a vice,
Would be to draw a shipwreck. Rescommon.

SEE'ER. n. f. [from seek.]

1. One that seeks; an inquirer.

Though I confess that in philosophy I am a seeker, yet cannot believe that a seeker in philosophy must be one in divinity. Clanville.

A language of a very witty volatile people, seekers after novelty, and abounding with variety of notions. Locke.

2. The name of a sect which professed no determinate religion.

SEEK-SORROW. n. f. [seek and sorrow.]

One who contrives to give himself vexation.

Afield they go, where many lookers be,
And thou seek'st sorrow, Klaus, thou among'st
Indeed thou findest it was thy friend to seek,
Strophon, whose absence seem'd unto thee long. Sidney.

TO SEEL. v. a. [seeller, to seel, French.]

To close the eyes. A term of falconry, the eyes of a wild or haggard hawk being for a time seeled or closed.

Now he brought them to see a seeled dove, who the blindest she was, the higher she strave, Sidney.

Mine eyes no more on vanity shall feed,
But seel'd up with death shall have their deadly meed. Fairy Queen.

Come, *seel*ing night,
Scarf up the tender eye of pitiful day. Shaksp. Macbeth.

Some ambitious men seem as seelers to princes in matters of danger and envy; for no man will take such parts, unless he be like the seel'd dove, that mounts and mounts, because he cannot see about him. Bacon.

Since, blinded with ambition, he did soar
Like a seel'd dove, his crimes shall be his punishment,
To be depriv'd of sight. Dromius's Sophy.

TO SEEL. v. n. [ryllan, Saxon.] To lean on one side.

When a ship seels or rows in foul weather, the breaking loose of ordnance is a thing very dangerous. Ralagh.

SEEL or SEELING. n. f. [from seel.] The agitation of a ship in foul weather. Amf.

SEE'LY. adj. [from see, lucky time, Sax.]

1. Lucky; happy.

My seely sheep like well below,
For they been hale enough and yow,
And liken their abode. Spenser.

2. Silly; foolish; simple.

Peacock and turkey, that misble off top,
Are very ill neighbours to seely poor hop. Tusser.

TO SEEM. v. n. [seemler, Fr. unless it has a Teutonick original, as seemly certainly has.]

1. To appear; to make a show; to have semblance.

My lord, you've lost a friend, indeed;
And I dare swear you borrow not that face
Of seeming sorrow; it is sure your own. Shaksp. Henry IV.

Speak: we will not trust our eyes
Without our ears: thou art not what thou seem'st.
Shakespeare
So spake th' Omnipotent; and with his words
All seem'd well pleas'd; all seem'd, but were not all.
Milton

In holy nuptials tied;
A seeming widow, and a secret bride.
Dryden
Observe the youth

Already seems to snuff the vital air. Dryden's Æn.
2. To have the appearance of truth.

It seems to me, that the true reason why we have so few virtues which are tolerable, is because there are so few who have all the talents requisite for translation. Dryden

3. In Shakespeare, to seem, perhaps, signifies to be beautiful.

Sir, there she stands:
If aught within that little seeming substance
May fitly like your grace,
She'll there, and she is yours. Shak. King Lear

4. It seems. A phrase hard to be explained. It sometimes signifies that there is an appearance, tho' no reality;
but generally it is used ironically to condemn the thing mentioned, like the Latin seemere, or the old English forsooth.
Id mihi datur negotia scilicet. This, it seems, is to be my task.

The earth by these, 'tis said,
This single crop of men and women bred;
Who, grown adult (to chance, it seems, enjoin'd)
Did male and female propagate. Blackmore's Creat.

5. It is sometimes a slight affirmation.
A prince of Italy, it seems, entertained his mistreis upon a great lake. Addison's Guardian
The raven, urg'd by such impertinence,
Grew pashionate, it seems, and took offence.
Addison

He had been a chief magistrate; and had, it seems, executed that high office justly and honourably. Atterbury

It seems that when first I was discovered creeping on the ground, the emperor had early notice.
Guliver

6. It appears to be.
Here's another discontented paper,
Found in his pocket too; and thus, it seems,
Roderigo meant to have sent. Shakespeare's Othello
It seems the camel's hair is taken by painters for the skin with the hair on. Brown's Vulg. Err.

SEEMER. n. f. [from seem.] One that carries an appearance.

Angelo scarce confesses
That his blood flows, or that his appetite
Is more to breed than stone; hence shall we see,
If pow'r change purpose, what our seemers are. Shak.

SEEMING. n. f. [from seem.]
1. Appearance; show; semblance.

All good seeming,
By thy revolt, oh husband, shall be thought
Put up for villany. Shakespeare's Cymbeline
Give birth heedful note,
And, after, we will both our judgments join
In censure of his seeming. Shakespeare's Hamlet

2. Fair appearance.
For you there's memory and rue; these keep Seeming and favour all the winter long. Shakespeare

3. Opinion.
Nothing more clear unto their seeming, than that, a new Jerusalem, long often spoken of in scripture, they undoubt'ly were themselves that new Jerusalem. Hobart

His persuasive words impregn'd
With reason to her seeming. Milton

SEEMINGLY. adv. [from seeming.] In appearance; in show; in semblance.

To this her mother's plot, Seemingly obedient, likewise hath come to the doctor. Shak. Merry Wives of Windsor

They to their vials fall, not seemingly.
The angel, nor in mid.
I have touched upon them, though seemingly collateral to my scope; and yet I think they are more than seemingly so, since they pertinently illustrate my design. Glanville's Scops

The city dame was so well bred, as seemingly to take all in good part. L'Estrange

The king and haughty empress, to our wonder,
If not aton'd, yet seemingly at peace. Dryden

This the father seemingly complied with; but afterwards refusing, the son was likewise set aside.
Addison's Freeholder

They depend often on remote and seemingly disproportioned causes. Atterbury

SEEMINGNESS. n. f. [from seeming.]
Plausibility; fair appearance.

The seemingness of those reasons persuades us on the other side. Digby

SEEMLINESS. n. f. [from seemly.] Decency; handsomeness; comeliness; grace; beauty.

When substantialness combineth with delightfulness, seemliness with portliness, and currentness with stayfulness, how can the language sound other-than full of sweetness? Camden

SEEMLY. adj. [from seem, seemly, Danish; from soome, Islandick, honour or decency.]
Decent; becoming; proper; fit.

Suspense of judgment and exercise of charity were fairer and fairer for Christian men, than the hot pursuit of these controversies. Hooker

I am a woman lacking wit
To make a seemly answer to such persons.
Shakespeare's Henry VIII

The wife safest and seemliest by her husband stays.
Milton

May we enjoy
Our humid products, and with seemly draughts
Enkindle mirth and hospitable love. Philips

SEEMLY. adv. [from the adjective.] In a decent manner; in a proper manner.

Tactic, seemly rang'd in peaceful order, stood Ulysses' arms, now long dispos'd to blood. Pope

SEEN. adj. [from see.] Skilled; versed.

Petruchio shall offer me, disguis'd in sober robes,
To old Baptista, as a schoolmaster
Well seen in music. Shakespeare

Noble Boyle, not less in nature seen,
Than his great brother read in states and men.
Dryden

SEER. n. f. [from see.]
1. One who sees.

We are in hopes that you may prove a dreamer of dreams, and a seer of visions. Addison's Spect.

2. A prophet; one who foresees future events.

How soon hath thy prediction, seer blest!
Measur'd this transient world the race of time,
'Till time stand fix'd. Milton's Paradise Lost

By day your frighted seers
Shall call for fountains to expiate their tears,
And with their eyes were floods: by night from dreams

Of opening gulphs, black storms, and raging flames,
Starting amaz'd, shall to the people show Emblems of heav'nly wrath, and mystic types of
woe. Prior

SEERWOOD. n. f. See SEARWOOD. Dry
wood.

Caught, like dry stubble fir'd, or like searwood;
Yet from the wound ensue no purple flood,
But look'd a bubbling mass of trying blood. Dryd.

SEESAW. n. f. [from saw.] A reciprocating motion.

His wit all seesaw, between that and this;
Now high, now low, now master up, now miss,
And he himself one vile antithesis. Pope

To SEESAW. v. n. [from saw.] To move with a reciprocating motion.

Sometimes they were like to pull John over,
then it went all of a sudden again on John's side;

to they went seesawing up and down, from one end of the room to the other. Arbutnot

SEETH. v. a. preterite, I seeth or seethed; part. pass. sadden. [seeth, Saxon; seiden,
den, Dutch.] To boil; to decoct in hot liquor.

The Scythians used to seeth the flesh in the hide, and so do the northern Irish. Spenser

Go, suck the subtle blood o' th' grape,
Till the high fever seeth your blood to froth,
And so 'scape hanging. Shakespeare's Timon

Set on the great pot, and seeth pottage for the sons of the prophets. 2 Kings, iv. 38

SEETH. v. n. To be in a state of ebullition; to be hot.

The boiling baths at Cairbadon,
Which seeth with secret fire eternally,
And in their entrails, full of quick brimston,
Nourish the flames which they are warm'd upon.
Fair's Queen

I will make a complimentary assault upon him;
for my business seeths. Shak. Troilus and Cressida

Lovers and madmen have their seething brains,
Such shaping fantasies, that apprehend
More than cool reason ever comprehends. Shak.

The priest's servant came, while the flesh was in seething, with a flesh-hook, and stuck it into the pan. 1 Sam. ii. 13

SEETHER. n. f. [from seeth.] A boiler;
a pot.

The fire thus form'd, she sets the kettle on;
Like burnish'd gold the little seether thone. Dryd.

SEGMENT. n. f. [segment, Fr. segmentum, Latin.] A figure contained between a chord and an arch of the circle, or so much of the circle as is cut off by that chord.

Unto a parallel sphere, and such as live under the poles, for half a year, some segments may appear at any time, and under any quarter, the sun not setting, but walking round. Brown

Their segments or arcs, which appeared so numerous, for the most part exceeded not the third part of a circle. Newton

SEGNETY. n. f. [from seguis, Lat.] Sluggishness; inactivity. Ditt.

SEGREGATE. v. a. [segrago, Lat.
segragere, Fr.] To set apart; to separate from others.

SEGREGATION. n. f. [segregation, Fr.
from segregate.] Separation from others.

What shall we hear of this?
—A segregation of the Turkish fleet;

For do not stand upon the foaming shore,
The chiding billows seem to pelt the clouds.
Shakespeare's Othello

SEJANT. adj. [In heraldry.] Sitting.

SEIGNEURIAL. adj. [from seignior.] Invested with large powers; independent.

Those lands were seigniorial. Temple

SEIGNIOR. n. f. [from senior, Lat. seigneur, Fr.] A lord. The title of honour given by Italians.

SEIGNORY. n. f. [seigneurie, Fr. from seignior.] A lordship; a territory.

O'Neal never had any seignory over that country, but what by encroachment he got upon the English. Spenser

Were you not restor'd
To all the duke of Norfolk's seignories?

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Hosea, in the person of God, layeth of the Jews, they have reigned, but not by me; they have set a seignory over themselves: which place proveh plainy, that there are governments which God doth not avow. Bacon

William, earl of Pembroke, being lord of all Leinster, had royal jurisdiction throughout that province, and every one of his five sons enjoyed that seignory successively. Darwin

SEIGNORAGE.

SE'IGNORAGE. n. f. [seigneurie, French, from seigneur.] Authority; acknowledgment of power.

They brought work to the mint, and a part of the money coined to the crown for seigneurage.

Locke.

To SE'IGNORISE. v. a. [from seigneur.] To lord over.

As tall he was as Cythera's make,
As proud as he that seignors hell.

Fairfax

SEINE. n. f. [regne, Saxon; seine, jeune, same, Fr.] A net used in fishing.

They have cock-boats for passengers, and seine boats for taking of pilchards.

Carver.

SE'INER. n. f. [from seine.] A fisher with nets.

Seiners complain, with open mouth, that these drowsy work much prejudice to the common-wealth of fishermen, and reap small gain to themselves.

Carver's Survey of Cornwall.

To SEIZE. v. a. [seize, Fr.]

1. To take hold of; to gripe; to grasp.

Then as a tiger, when by chance hath tied,
In some purpled, two gentle towns at play,
Straight couches close, then rising changes oft
His couchant watch; as one who chose his ground, Whence rushing he might forest seize them both,
Both grip'd in each paw.

Milton.

2. To take possession of by force.

At last they seize

The sceptre, and regard not David's sons.

Milton.

3. To take possession of; to lay hold on; to invade suddenly.

In her sat breast the prince's fortunes roll,
And hope and doubt alternate seize her soul.

Pope.

4. To take forcible possession of by law.

An alcheator of London had arrested a clothier that was outlawed, and seized his goods.
It was judged, by the highest kind of judgment, that he should be banished, and his whole estate confiscated and seized, and his houses pulled down.

Bacon.

5. To make possessed; to put in possession of.

So th' one for wrong, the other strives for right:
As when a griffin, seiz'd of his prey,
A dragon fierce encountereth in his flight,
Through wildest air making his idle way.

Fairy Queen.

So Pluto, seiz'd of Proserpine, convey'd
To hell's tremendous gloom th' affrighted maid,
There grimly smil'd, pleas'd with the beauteous prize.

Not envied Jove his sunshine and his skies.

Addison's Cato.

To SEIZE. v. n. To fix the grasp or the power on any thing.

Fairfax Cordelia,

There and thy virtues here I seize upon:

But lawful I take up what's cast away?

Shakespeare's King Lear.

Where there is a design of supplanting, that necessarily requires another of accusing: even Jezebel projects not to seize on Naboth's vineyard without a precedent charge.

Decay of Piety.

SE'IZIN. n. f. [seisine, Fr.]

1. [In law.] Is of two sorts: seisin in fact, and seisin in law. Seisin in fact, is when a corporal possession is taken; seisin in law, is when something is done which the law accounteth a seisin, as an inrolment. This is as much as a right to lands and tenements, though the owner be by wrong disseised of them.

Cowell.

2. The act of taking possession.

Every indulg'd sin gives Satan livery and seisin of his hearty, and a power to dispose of it as he pleases.

Decay of Piety.

Seisin is the same, in the canon law, as livery and seisin at the common law.

Asyliff's Parergon.

3. The things possessed.

Many recoveries were had, as well by heirs as successors, of the seisin of their predecessors.

Hale.

SE'IZURE. n. f. [from seize]

1. The act of seizing.

2. The thing seized.

Sufficient that thy prayers are heard, and death,
Then due by sentence when thou didst transgress,
Deceased of his seizure, many days
Giv'n thee of grace.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. The act of taking forcible possession.

Thy lands, and all things that thou dost call thine,
Worth seizure, do we seize into our hands.

Shak.

In the general town he maintained a seizure, and possession of the whole.

Milton.

Henry continued to burn protestants, after he had cast off the pope; and his seizure of ecclesiastical revenues cannot be reckoned as a mark of the church's liberty.

Swift.

4. Gripe; possession.

And shall these hands, so lately purg'd of blood,
Unyoke this seizure, and this kind regret?
Make o'er thy honour by a dreed of trust,
And give me seizure of the mighty wealth.

Dryd.

5. Catch.

Let there be no sudden seizure of a laps'd syllable, to play upon it.

Warre.

SE'LCOUTH. adj. [selb, rare, Sax. and couth, known] Rarely known; uncommon: Spenser. The same with unouth.

SE'LDOM. adv. [selban, rarely; selbon, more rarely; selbort, most rarely. Seldan is supposed to be contracted from selben, or selb, rare, and hpanne, when, Saxon; jelden, Dutch; jeltan, German.] Rarely; not often; not frequently.

Wisdom and youth are seldom joined in one, and the ordinary course of the world is more according to Job's observation, who giveth men advice to seek wisdom amongst the ancients, and in the length of days understanding.

Horat.

There is true joy conveyed to the heart by preventing grace, which pardoning grace seldom gives.

South's Sermons.

Where the flight of fancy is managed with good judgment, the seldomer it is seen it is the more valuable.

Grete.

SE'LDOMNESS. n. f. [from seldom.] Uncommonness; infrequency; rareness; rarity. Little used.

Degrees of well-doing there could be none, except perhaps in the seldomness and oftiness of doing well.

Hasker.

SE'LDOWN. adj. [seld and down.] Seldom exhibited to view.

Seldowen flamins

Do press among the popular throngs.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus

To SELE'CT. v. a. [selectus, Lat.] To chuse in preference to others rejected.

The footmen, selected out of all the provinces, were greatly diminished, being now scarce eight thousand strong.

Knolles.

The pious chief

A hundred youths from all his train selects.

Dryd.

SELE'CT. adj. [from the verb.] Nicely chosen; choice; called out on account of superior excellence.

To the nuptial bow'r

I led her, blushing like the morn: all heav'n,
And happy constellations, on that hour
Shed their select influence.

Milton's Par. Lost.

Select from vulgar herds, with garlands gay,
A hundred bulls ascend the sacred way.

Prior.

SELE'CTION. n. f. [selectio, Lat from select.]

1. The act of culling or choosing; choice.

While we single out several dishes, and reject others, the selection seems but arbitrary.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

SELE'CTNESS. n. f. [from select.] The state of being select.

SELE'CTOR. n. f. [from select.] He who selects.

SELENOGRAPHICAL. adj. [selenogra- SELENOGRAPHIC. } phique, Fr. from selenography.] Belonging to selenography.

SELENOGRAPHY. n. f. [selenographie, Fr. selénion and γράφω.] A description of the moon.

Hevelius, in his accurate selenography, or description of the moon, hath well translated the known appellations of regions, seas, and mountains, unto the parts of that luminary.

Brown.

SEL'F. pronoun. plur. selves. [selba, Gothic; selb, selbā, Sax. self, selv, Dutch.]

1. Its primary signification seems to be that of an adjective. Very; particular; this above others; sometimes, one's own.

Shout another arrow that self way

Which you did shoot the first.

Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

The cruel ministers, by self and violent hands,
Took off her life.

Shakespeare's

On these self hills the air is so thin, that it is not sufficient to bear up the body of a bird.

Ruleigh.

At that self moment enters Palamon

The gate of Venus.

Dryden.

2. It is united both to the personal pronouns, and to the neutral pronoun it, and is always added when they are used reciprocally, or return upon themselves: as, I did not hurt him, he hurt himself; the people hiss me, but I clap myself; thou lovest thyself, though the world scorns thee.

They call to build a city,

And get themselves a name.

Milton.

He permits

Within himself another power to reign

Over his reason

Milton.

Self is that conscious thinking thing, which is sensible or conscious of pleasure and pain, capable of happiness and misery, and to be concerned for itself, as he is the consciousness of itself.

Locke.

3. It is sometimes used emphatically in the nominative case: as, myself will decide it; I myself will come; himself shall revenge it. This use of self, thus compounded, without the pronoun personal, is chiefly poetical.

4. Compounded with him, a pronoun substantive, self is in appearance an adjective; joined to my, thy, our, your, pronoun adjectives, it seems a substantive. Even when compounded with him it is at last found to be a substantive, by its variation in the plural, contrary to the nature of English adjectives, as himself, themselves.

No more be mention'd then of silence,

Against ourselves, or useful benevolence.

Milton.

5. Myself, himself, themselves, and the rest, may, contrary to the analogy of my, him, them, be used as nominatives.

6. It often adds only emphasis and force to the pronoun with which it is compounded: as, he did it himself.

A horse well braced, which himself did dress.

Dryden.

And touch'd with miseries myself have known,
I learn to pity woe as like my own.

Dryden.

7. It signifies the individual, as subject to his own contemplation or action.

The spark of noble courage now awake,
And strive your excellent self to excel. Fairy Qu.
Next to the knowledge of God, this knowledge of our selves seems most worthy or our endeavour, Hale.

Since consciousness always accompanies thinking, and it is that that makes every one to be what he calls self, and thereby distinguishes himself from all other thinking things, in this alone consists personal identity, i. e. the sameness of a rational being. Locke.

It is by the consciousness it has of its present thoughts and actions, that it is self to itself now, and so will be the same self, as far as the same consciousness can extend to actions past or to come. Locke.

The fondness we have for self, and the relation which other things have to our selves, furnishes another long rank of prejudices. Watts.

8. It is much used in composition, which it is proper to explain by a train of examples. It is to be observed, that its composition in Shakespeare is often harsh.

Then held she her tongue, and cast down a self-accusing look, finding that in herself she had shut out of the bow of her affection a more quick opening of her mind than the minded to have done. Sidney.

Alas! while we are wrapt in foggy mist
Of our self-love, in passions do deceive,
We think they hurt when most they do assist. Sid.
Till Stephen's pining voice him nearer drew,
Where by his words his self-like tale he knew. Sidney.

Ah! where was first that cruel cunning found,
To frame of earth a vessel of the mind,
Where it should be to self-deduction bound? Sid.
Before the door sat self-consuming care,
Day and night keeping way watch and ward, Fanny Queen.

My strange and self-abuse
Is the mirror that war that wears hard use. Sh. Macb.
I have heard so much,
And with Demetrius thought to have spoke thereof,
But being over-full of self-attires,
My mind did lose it. Shak. Mid. Night's Dream.
Not know I ought
By me that's laid or done amiss this night,
Unless self-chastity be sometimes a vice,
And to defend ourselves it be a sin,
When violence assails us. Shakespeare's Othello.
He walks, and that self-chain about his neck,
Which he swore. Shakespeare.
It is in my power, in one self-born hour,
To plant and overwhelm custom. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

His treasons will sit blushing in his face,
Not able to endure the sight of day,
But self-afrighted tremble at his sin. Shakespeare's Richard II.

The stars above us govern our conditions,
Else one self-mate and mate could not beget
Such different issues. Shakespeare.
I'm made of that self metal as my fitter,
And prize me at her worth. Shakespeare's King Lear.
In my school-days, when I had lost one thatt,
I shot his fellow of the self-same flight
The self-same way, with more advised watch,
To find the other forth. Shakespeare.

He may do some good on her:
A peevish self-will'd beauty it is.
But lest myself be guilty of self-wrong,
I'll stop mine ears against the mermaid's song. Shakespeare.

He coughs, and flatter'd his displeasure,
Tipt me behind being down, insulted, said,
Ases of the king attempting who was self-subdued. Shak.
he Everlasting first cannon gain'd self-slaughter. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Know if his last purpose holds
Or whether since he is advis'd by aught
To change the course, he's full of alteration
And self-reproving. Shakespeare's King Lear.
More it lets to others paying,
Than by self-offences weighing:
Shame to him whose cruel striking Kills for faults of his own liking! Shakespeare.
Belona's bridegroom, lapt in proof,
Confronted him with self-caparison,
Point against point. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Self-love, my liege, is not so vile a sin
As self-neglecting. Shakespeare's Henry V.

Anger is like
A full hot horse, who being allow'd his way,
Self-mettle tires him. Shakespeare.
His lords desire him to have borne
His bruised helmet and his bended sword
Before him through the city; he forbids it,
Being free from vainness and self-glorious pride. Shakespeare.

You promis'd
To lay aside self-harming heaviness,
And entertain a cheerful disposition. Shak. R. III.
In their anger they flew a man, and in their self-will they digged down a wall. Gen. xlix. 6.
The most ordinary cause of a single life is liberty, especially in certain self-pleasing and humorous minds, which are so sensible of every restraint as to think their girdles and garters to be bonds and shackles. Bacon.
Hast thou let up nothing in competition with God; no pride, profit, self-love, or self-interest of thy own? Deppa.

Up through the spacious palace passed the
To where the king's proudly reposed head,
If any can be so to tyranny,
And self-tempting sin, had a soft bed. Craslow.
With a joyful willingness these self-loving reformers took possession of all vacant preferments, and with reluctance others parted with their beloved colleges and subsistence. Walton.

Repent the sin; but if the punishment
Thou canst avoid, self-preservation bids. Milton.
Him fast sleeping soon he found,
In labyrinth of many a round self-roll'd. Milton.
Of times nothing profits more Than self-esteem, grounded on just and right,
Well manag'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Self-knowing, and from thence Magnanimous, to correspond with heav'n. Milton.
So virtue giv'n for lost,
Deputy and so, the way, as seem'd,
Like that self-hungry bird,
In the Arabian woods embosht,
That no second knows nor third,
And lay ere while a holocaust,
From out her duby womb now term'd. Milton's Agnes.

He follows now, repents, and prays contrite,
My motions in him: longer than they move,
His heart I know how variable and vain,
Self-love. Milton.
Sneer approves th's self-homicide. Hakewill.
Thyself from flatter'ng self-conceit defend,
Nor what thou dost not know, to know pretend. Denham.

Man's that savage beast, whose mind,
From reason to self-love declin'd,
Delights to prey upon his kind. Denham.
Farewell, my tears;
And, my just anger, be no more confin'd
To vain complaints or self-devouring silence. Denham.

They are yet more mad to think that men may rest by death, though they die in self-murder, the greatest sin.
Are not these strange self-delusions, and yet attested by common experience? South's Sermons.
If the image of God is only sovereignty, certainly we have been hitherto much mistaken, and hereafter are to beware of making ourselves unlike God, by too much self-love and humility. South.

If a man would have a devout, humble, sin-abhorring, self-denying frame of spirit, he cannot take a more efficacious course to attain it than by praying himself into it. South.

Let a man apply himself to the difficult work of self-examination, by a strict scrutiny into the whole estate of his soul. South.

A fatal self-imposture, such as defeats the design, and destroys the force, of all religion. South.
When he intends to bereave the world of an illustrious person, he may call him upon a bold self-opinioned physician, worse than his distemper, who shall make a shift to cure him into his grave. South.

Neglect of friends can never be proved rational, till we prove the person using it omnipotent and self-sufficient, and such as can never need any mortal assistance. South.

By all human laws, as well as divine, self-murder has ever been agreed on as the greatest crime. Temple.

A self-conceited top will swallow any thing. L'Estrange.

From Atræus though your ancient lineage came;
Yet my self-conscious worth, your high renown,
Your virtue, through the neighb'ring nations blown. Dryden.

He has given you all the commendation which his self-sufficiency could afford to any. Dryden.

Below you sphere
There hangs the ball of earth and water mixt, Self-centered and unmov'd. Dryden, State of Inn.
All these receive their birth from other things,
But from himself the phoenix only springs,
Self-born, begotten by th'parent flame
In which he burn'd, another and the same. Dryden.
The burning fire, that shone so bright,
Flew off all sudden with extinguish'd light,
And left one altar dark, a little space,
Which turn'd self-kindled, and renew'd the blaze. Dryden.

Thou first, O king! release the rights of sway;
Pow'r, self-restrain'd, the people best obey. Dryden.
Eighteen and nineteen are equal to thirty-seven, by the same self-evidence that one and two are equal to three. Locke.

A contradiction of what has been said, is a mark of yet greater pride and self-conceit, when we take upon us to set another right in his story. Locke.
I am as justly accountable for any action done many years since, appropriated to me now by this self-consciousness, as I am for what I did the last moment. Locke.

Each intermediate idea agreeing on each side with those two, it is immediately placed between:
the ideas of men and self-determination appear to be connected. Locke.

This self-existent being hath the power of perfection, as well as of existence, in himself; for he that is above, or existeth without, any cause, that is, hath the power of existence in himself, cannot be without the power of any possible existence. Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.

Body cannot be self-existent, because it is not self-movement; for motion is not of the essence of body, because we may have a definitive conception of body, abstracted from that of motion; wherefore motion is something else besides body, something without which body may be conceived to exist. Grew.

Confidence, as opposed to modesty, and distinguished from decent assurance, proceeds from self-opinion, occasioned by ignorance or flattery. Collier of Confidence.

Bewilder'd, I my author cannot find,
Till some first cause, some self-existent mind,
Who form'd and rules all nature, is assign'd. Blackmore.

If a first body may to any place
Be not determin'd in the boundless space,
The plain it then may absent be from all,
Who then will this a self-existence call? Blackmore.

Shall nature, erring from her first command,
Self-preservation, fall by her own hand? Granville.
Low nonsense is the talent of a cold phlegmatick temper: a writer of this complexion gropes his way softly among self-contradiction, and grovels in absurdities. Addison.

This fatal hypocrisy and self-deceit is taken notice of in these words; Who can understand his circuits? cleanse thou me from secret faults.

Addison's Spectator

The guilt of perjury is so self-evident, that it was always reckoned among the greatest crimes by those who were only governed by the light of reason.

Addison

Self-sufficiency proceeds from inexperience. Men had better own their ignorance, than advance doctrines which are self-contradictory.

Spectator

Light, which of all bodies is nearest allied to spirit, is also most diffusive and self-communicative.

Norris

Thus we see, in bodies, the more of kin they are to spirit in subtilty and refinement, the more spreading are they and self-diffusive.

Norris

God, who is an absolute spiritual act, and who is such a pure light as in which there is no darkness, must needs be infinitely self-impacting and communicative.

Norris

Every animal is conscious of some individual self-movings, self-determining principle.

Pope and Arbuth. Mart. Scrib.

Nick does not pretend to be a gentleman: he is a tradesman, a self-seeking wretch.

Ab. John Bull

By the blast of self-opinion mov'd,

We wish to charm, and seek to be belov'd.

Living and understanding substances do clearly demonstrate to philosophical inquirers the necessary self-existence, power, wisdom, and beneficence of their Maker.

Bentley

If it can intrinsically stir itself, and either commerce or alter its course, it must have a principle of self-activity, which is life and sense.

Bentley's Sermons.

This desire of existence is a natural affection of the soul; 'tis self-preservation in the highest and truest meaning.

Bentley

The philosophers, and even the Epicureans maintained the self-sufficiency of the godhead, and seldom or never sacrificed at all.

Bentley

Matter is not endued with self-motion, nor with a power to alter the course in which it is put: it is merely passive, and must ever continue in that state it is fitted in.

Cibyne

I took not arms, till urg'd by self-defence,

The eldest law of nature.

His labour and study would have shewn his early mistakes, and cured him of self-flattering delusions.

Watts

This is not to be done in a rash and self-sufficient manner; but with an humble dependance on divine grace, while we walk among sinners.

Watts

The religion of Jesus, with all its self-denials, virtues, and devotions, is very practicable.

Watts

I heard in Crete, this island's name;

For 'twas in Crete, my native soil, I came

Self-banish'd thence.

Pope's Odyssey.

Achilles's courage is furious and untractable, that of Ajax is heavy and self-confiding.

Pope

I doom, to fix the gallant ship,

A mark of vengeance on the false deep;

To warn the thoughtless self-confiding train

No more unlicens'd thus to brave the main.

Pope

What is loose love? a transient gust,

A vapour fed from wild desire,

A wand'ring self-consuming fire.

Pope

In dubious thought the king awaits,

And self-considering, as he stands, debates.

Pope

By mighty Jov's command,

Unwilling have I trod this pleasing land;

For who self-mov'd with weary wing would sweep

Such length of ocean?

Pope

'They who reach Parnassus' lofty crown

Employ their pains to spurn some others down;

And, while self-love each jealous writer rules,

Contending wits become the sport of fools.

Pope

It may be thought that Ulysses here is too ostentatious, and that he dwells more than modesty allows upon his own accomplishments; but self-praise is sometimes no fault.

Broom

No wonder such a spirit, in such a situation,

Is provoked beyond the regards of religion or self-conviction.

Swift

SELPHAEAT. n. f. [brunella, Latin.] A plant. The same with SANICLE; which see.

SELFISH. adj. [from self.] Attentive only to one's own interest; void of regard for others.

What could the most aspiring selfish man desire more, were he to form the notion of a being to whom he would recommend himself, than such a knowledge as can discover the least appearance of perfection, and such a goodness as will proportion reward to it?

Addison's Spectator.

Passions, though selfish, if their means be fair, lift under reason, and deserve her care; Those that imparted court a nobler aim; Exalt their kind, and take some virtue's name.

Pope

SELFISHNESS. n. f. [from selfish.] Attention to his own interest, without any regard to others; self-love.

This sublimer love, being, by an intimate conjunction with its object, thoroughly refined from all base drops of selfishness and interest, nobly brings a perfect submission of our wills to the will of God.

Boyle's Seraphick Love

SELFISHLY. adv. [from selfish.] With regard only to his own interest; without love of others.

He can your merit selfishly approve, And shew the sense of it without the love.

Pope

SELFAME. adj. [self and fame.] Exactly the same.

I have no great cause to look for other than the self-same portion and lot, which your manner hath been hitherto to lay on them that contrive not in opinion with you.

Hooker, Preface.

Flight pursued one way the self-same hour.

Mil.

Base ev'n to him from whom I did receive All that a son could to a parent give; Behold me punish'd in the self-same kind!

'Th' ungrateful does a more ungrateful find.

Dryd.

SELION. n. f. [sello, low Latin.] A ridge of land.

Ainsworth.

SELL. pronoun. [for self.] Sell is retained in Scotland for self, and sells in the plural for selves.

They turn round like grindstone-stones, Which they dig out fro' the dells, For their bairns bread, wives, and sells.

Ben Jonson.

SELL. n. f. [selle, French; sella, Latin.] A saddle. Obsolete.

Turning to that place, in which He left his lofty steed with golden sells, And goodly gorgon's barbes, him found not there.

Fairy Queen.

To SELL. v. a. [ryllan, Saxon; sela, Islandick.]

To give for a price; the word correlative to buy; to vend.

The Midianites sold him into Egypt, unto Puthai.

Genesis.

Let us sell him to the Ishmaelites.

Genesis, xxxvii. 27.

This sense is likewise mistreft of an art, Which to soft people sweet perfumes doth sell.

Dante.

All the inns and public-houses are obliged to furnish themselves with corn, which is sold out at a much dearer rate than 'tis bought up.

Addison on Italy.

You have made an order that also should be sold for three halfpence a quart.

Swift.

To betray for money; as, he sold his country.

You would have sold your king to Daughters, His princes and his peers to servitude.

Shakspeare.

To SELL. v. n. To have commerce or traffic with one.

I will buy with you, sell with you; but I will not eat with you.

Shakspeare, Merchant of Venice.

Consult not with a buyer of selling.

SELLANDER. n. f. A dry scab in a horse's hough or pattern.

Ainsworth.

SELLER. n. f. [from sell.] The person that sells; vender.

To things of sale a seller's praise belongs.

Shak.

Tenancie of the agent, of the seller, notary, and witness, are in both instruments.

Add. on Italy.

SELVAGE. n. f. [Of this word I know not the etymology.] Slammer thinks selvage is said as salvage, from its saving the cloth. The edge of cloth where it is closed by complicating the threads.

Make laps of blue upon the edge of the one certain from the selvage in the couch.

Exod. xvi. 4.

SELVES. The plural of self.

Consciousness being interrupted, and we losing sight of our past selves, doubts are raised whether we are the same.

Locke.

SEMBLABLE. adj. [semblable, French.] Like; resembling.

Then be abhor'd

All sects, societies, and throngs of men!

His semblable, yea himself, Timon did damn.

Shakspeare.

With semblable reason we might expect a regularity in the winds.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

SEMBLABLY. adv. [from semblable.] With resemblance.

A gallant knight he was, his name was Blunt; Sembliably turnish'd like the king himself.

Shakspeare's Henry IV.

SEMBLANCE. n. f. [semblance, Fr. from semblant.]

Likeness; resemblance; similitude; representation.

Solicit Henry with her wondrous praise: Bethink thee on her virtues, that surmount Her natural graces, that extinguish art; Repeat their semblance often.

Shakspeare.

She's but the sign and semblance of her honour; Behold how like a maid she blushes here!

O, what authority and shew of truth

Can cunning sin cover itself withal!

Shakspeare.

He with high words, that bore

Semblance of worth, not substance, gently rais'd

Their taunting courage, and dispell'd their fears.

Adison.

This last effort brought forth the opinion, that these bodies are not what they seem to be; that they are no shells, but mere sportings of active nature, and only semblances or imitations of shells.

Woodward.

It is not his meaning that we put on the outward face and semblance of virtue, only to conceal and disguise our vice.

Regia.

Appearance; show; figure.

Be you the soldier, for you liked are, For manly semblance, and for skill in war.

Spenser.

Their semblance kind, and mild their gestures were,

Peace in their hands, and friendship in their face,

Faust.

All that fair and good in thy divine

Semblance, and in thy beauty's heavenly ray,

United I behold.

SEMBLANT, adj. [semblant, French.] Like; resembling; having the appearance of any thing. Little used.

Thy picture, like thy name,

Entire may last; that, as their eyes survey

The semblant shade, men yet unborn may say,

Thus great, thus gracious, look'd Britannia's queen;

Her brow thus imposing, her look was thus serene.

Prior.

S E M

SEMIANT. n. f. Show; figure; resemblance; representation. Not in use.

Her purpose was not such as she did feign,
Nor yet her person such as it was seen;
But under simple shew, and semblant plain,
Lurk, false Ducissa, secretly unseen. Fairy Queen.
Full lively is the semblant, tho' the substance dead. Spenser.

SEMIATIVE. adj. [from semblant.] Suitable; accommodate; fit; resembling.

Diana's lip
Is not more smooth and ruby; thy small pipe
Is as the maiden's organ shrill and sound;
And all is semblant to a woman's part. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

TO SEMBLE. v. n. [from sembler, Fr.] To represent; to make a likeness. Little used.

Let Europe, say'd, the column high erect,
Than Trajan's higher, or than Antonine's,
Where sembling art may carve the fair effect
And fall achievement of thy great designs. Prior.

SEMI. n. f. [Latin.] A word which, used in composition, signifies half: as, semicircle, half a circle.

SEMIANULAR. adj. [from semi, and annulus, a ring.] Half round.

Another bear tusk, somewhat slenderer, and of a semiannular figure. Crew's Museum.

SEMIREF. n. f. [from semihrev, French.]

Semihrev is a note in music relating to time, and is the last in augmentation. It is commonly called the matter-note, or measure-note, or time-note, as being of a certain determinate measure or length of time by itself; and all the other notes of augmentation and diminution are adjusted to its value. Harris.

He takes my hand, and as a still which stays
A semihrev twist each drop, he nigga dly,
As loth to enrich me, so tells many a lye. Dante.

SEMICIRCLE. n. f. [from semicirculus, Lat. semi and circle] A half round; part of a circle divided by the diameter.

Black brows
Become some women's brows, so they be in a semicircle,
Or a half moon, made with a pen. Shakespeare.

Has he given the lye
In circle, or oblique, or semicircle,
Or direct parallel? Shakespeare.

The chains that held my left leg gave me the liberty of walking backwards and forwards in a semicircle. Swift.

SEMICIRCLED. } adj. [from semi and circulus, Lat.] Half round.

The firm fixture of thy foot would give an excellent motion to thy gait, in a semicircled thingale. Shakespeare.

The rainbow is caused by the rays of the sun falling upon a solid and opaque cloud, whereof some reflected, others refracted, beget the semicircular variety we call the rainbow. Br. Vulg. Err.

The legs are included between the two semicircular moles that surround it. Addison on Italy.

SEMICOLON. n. f. [from semi and colon.] Half a colon; a point made thus {;} to note a greater pause than that of a comma.

SEMIAMETER. n. f. [from semi and diameter.] Half the line which, drawn through the centre of a circle, divides it into two parts; a straight line drawn circumference to the center of

it:

Their difference is as little considerable as a diameter of the earth in two measures of the globe given, the one taken from the surface of the earth, the other from its centre: the disproportion is just nothing. Adory.

S E M

The force of this instrument consists in the proportion of distance betwixt the semidiameter of the cylinder and the semidiameter of the rundle with the spokes. Wilkins.

SEMIAPHANEITY. n. f. [from semi and diaphaneity.] Half transparency; imperfect transparency.

The transparency or semiaphaneity of the superficial corpascles of bigger bodies, may have an interest in the production of their colours. Boyle on Colours.

SEMIAPHANOUS. adj. [from semi and diaphanous.] Half transparent; imperfectly transparent.

Another plate, finely variegated with a semiaphanous grey or sky, yellow and brown. Woodward on Fossils.

SEMIDOUBLE. n. f. [from semi and double.] In the Romish breviary, such offices and feasts as are celebrated with less solemnity than the double ones, but yet with more than the single ones. Bailey.

SEMINAL. adj. [from seminal, French; seminis, Latin.]

1. Belonging to seed.
2. Contained in the seed; radical.

Had our senses never presented us with those obvious seminal principles of apparent generations, we should never have suspected that a plant or animal would have proceeded from such unlikely materials. Glanville's Scapula.

Though we cannot prolong the period of a commonwealth beyond the decree of heaven, or the date of its nature, any more than human life beyond the strength of the seminal virtue, yet we may manage a sickly constitution, and preserve a strong one. Swift.

SEMINALITY. n. f. [from semen, Latin.]

1. The nature of seed.

As though there were a seminality in urine, or that, like the seed, it carried with it the idea of every part, they conceive we behold therein the anatomy of every particle. Brown.

2. The power of being produced.

In the seeds of wheat their birth obscurely the seminality of dandel. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

SEMINARY. n. f. [from seminarius, Fr. seminarius, from semeno, Latin.]

SEMIOWEL. n. f. [semi and vowel.] A consonant which makes an imperfect sound, or does not demand a total occlusion of the mouth.

When Homer would represent any agreeable object, he makes use of the smoothest vowels and most flowing semiovowels. Bacon.

SEMPERVIVE. n. f. [semper and vivus, Latin; that is, always alive.] A plant.

The greater sempervives will put out branches two or three years; but they wrap the root in an oil-cloth once in half a year. Bacon.

SEMPITERNAL. adj. [sempiternal, Fr. sempiternus, from semper and eternus, Lat.]

1. Eternal in futurity; having beginning, but no end.

Those, though they suppose the world not to be eternal, a parte ante, are not contented to suppose it to be sempiternal, or eternal a parte post; but will carry up the creation of the world to an immense antiquity. Hale.

2. In poetry it is used simply for eternal.

Should we the long-depending scale ascend
Of sons and fathers, will it never end?
If 'twill, then must we through the order
To some one man whose being ne'er begun;
If that one man was sempiternal, why Did he, since independent, ever die? Blackmore.

SEMPITERNITY. n. f. [sempiternitas, Latin.] Future duration without end.

The future eternity or sempiternity of the world being admitted, though the eternity a parte ante be denied, there will be a future infinity for the emanation of the divine goodness. Hale.

SEMPRESS. n. f. [seameretne, Sax.] A woman whose business is to sew; a woman who lives by her needle.

Two hundred sempresses were employed to make me shirts, and linen for bed and table, which they were forced to quilt together in several folds. Gulliver's Travels.

SE'NATE. n. f. [senatus, Latin; senat, French.] An assembly of counsellors; a body of men set apart to consult for the publick good.

We debate
The nature of our state, which will in time break ope
The locks e' th' senate, and bring in the crows
To peck the eagle. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

There they shall found
Their government, and their great senate chuse. Milton.

He had not us'd excursions, spears, or darts,
But counsel, order, and such aged arts;
Which if our ancestors had not retain'd,
The senate's name our council had not gain'd. Denham.

Gallus was welcom'd to the sacred strand,
The senate rising to salute their guest. Dryden.

SE'NATEHOUSE. n. f. [senate and house.] Place of publick council.

The nobles in great earnestness are going
All to the senatehouse; some news is come. Shak.

SE'NATOR. n. f. [senator, Latin; senateur, French.] A publick counsellor.

Most unwise patricians,
You grave but reckless senators. Shakespeare's Curiolanus.

sent. [sandgan, Gothick; renban, Saxon; senden, Dutch.]

1. To despatch from one place to another:

used both of persons and things.

He sent letters by posts on horseback. Esle.

His citizens sent a message after him, saying,
We will not have this man to reign over us. Luke, xix. 14.

There have been commissions
Sent down among them, which have flaw'd the heart
Of all their loyalties. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

My overshadowing spirit and might with thee
I send along. Milton.

To remove him I decree,
And send him from the garden forth to till
The ground whence he was taken, fitter soil. Milton.

His wounded men he first sends off to shore. Dryden.

Servants, sent on messages, stay out somewhat longer than the message requires. Swift.

2. To commission by authority to go and act.

I have not sent these prophets, yet they ran. Jer.

But first, whom shall we send
In search of this new world? Here he had need
All circumspection, and we now no less Choice in our suffrage; for on whom we send
The weight of all and our last hope relies. Milton.

3. To transmit by another; not to bring.

They sent it to the elders by the hands of Barnabas. Acts.

4. To dismiss another as agent; not to go.

God will deign
To visit oft the dwellings of just men
Delighted, and with frequent intercourse,
Thither will send his winged messengers
On errands of supernal grace. Milton.

5. To grant as from a distant place: as, if God send life.

I pray thee find me good speed this day, and shew kindness unto my master. Gen. xxiv. 12.

O send out thy light and thy truth; let them lead me. Psalms.

6. To inflict, as from a distance.

The Lord shall send upon thee cursing, vexation, and rebuke, in all that thou settest thine hand unto. Deut. xxviii.

7. To emit; to immit; to produce.

The water sends forth plants that have no roots fixed in the bottom, being almost buoyed up. Bacon's Natural History.

The senses send in only the images of material things, and the imagination and memory present only their pictures or images, when the objects themselves are absent. Cheyne.

8. To diffuse; to propagate.

Cherubic songs by night from neighb'ring hills
Aerial music send. Milton.

When the fury took her stand on high,
A hiss from all the snaky tire went round:
The dreadful signal all the rocks rebound,
And through th' Achaian cities send the sound. Pope.

9. To let fly; to cast or shoot.

To SEND. v. n.

1. To despatch a message.

I have made bold to send in to your wife
My suit is that she will to Desdemona Procure me some access. Shakespeare's Othello.

This son of a murderer hath sent to take away
my head. King.

They could not attempt their perfect reformation in church and state, till those votes were utterly abolished; therefore they sent the same day again to the king. Clarendon.

2. To send for. To require by message to come, or cause to be brought.

Go with me, some few of you, and see the place;
and then you may send for your sick, which bring on land. Bacon.

He sent for me; and, while I rais'd his head,
He threw his aged arms about my neck,
And, seeing that I wept, he press'd me close. Dryden.

SE'NDER. n. f. [from send.] He that sends.

This was a merry message.

—We hope to make the sender blush at it. Shakespeare's Henry V.

Love that comes too late,
Like a remorseful pardon slowly carried,
To the great sender turns a four offence. Shakespeare.

Best with the best, the sender, not the sent. Milton.

SENE'SCENCE. n. f. [senesce, Lat.] The state of growing old; decay by time.

The earth and all things will continue in the state wherein they now are, without the least senescence or decay; without jarring, disorder, or invasion of one another. Woodward.

SE'NESCHAL. n. f. [seneschal, Fr. of uncertain original.]

1. One who had in great houses the care of feasts or domestick ceremonies.

John earl of Huntingdon, under his seal of arms, made Sir John Arundel, of Trevice, seneschal of his household, as well in peace as in war. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Marshall's feast,
Serv'd up in hall with sewers and seneschals;
The skill of artifice, or office, mean! Milton's Paradise Lost.

The seneschal rebuk'd in haste withdrew;
With equal haste a menial train pursue. Pope's Odyssey.

SE'NILE. adj. [senilis, Lat.] Belonging to old age; consequent on old age.

My green youth made me very unripe for a task of that nature, whose difficulty requires that it should be handled by a person in whom nature, education, and time, have happily match'd a senile maturity of judgment with youthful vigour of farcy. Boyle of Colours.

SE'NIOR. n. f. [senior, Lat.]

1. One older than another; one who, on account of longer time, has some superiority.

How can you admit your seniors to the examination or allowing of them, not only being inferior in office and calling, but in gifts also? Wierigste.

SEN

SEN. An aged person.
A senior of the place replies,
Well read, and curious of antiquities. Dryden.
SENIORITY, n. f. [from senior.] Eldership; priority of birth.

As in insurrections the ringleader is looked on with a peculiar severity, so, in this case, the first provoker has, by his seniority and primogeniture, a double portion of the guilt. Gov. of the Tongue.

He was the elder brother, and Ulysses might be consigned to his care by the right due to his seniority. Broom.

SE'NNA. n. f. [senna, Lat.] A physical tree.
Miller.

What rhubarb, senna, or what purgative drug,
Would scour these English livers? Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Senna tree is of two sorts; the bastard senna, and the scorpion senna; both which yield a pleasant leaf and flower. Matur.

SE'NNIGHT. n. f. [contracted from sevennight.] The space of seven nights and days; a week. See FORTNIGHT.

If mention is made, on Monday, of Thursday *sen*nights, the Thursday that follows the next Thursday, is meant.

Time trots hard with a young maid between the contract of her marriage and the day it is solemnized: if the interim be but a *sen*nights, time's pace is so hard that it seems the length of seven years. Shakespeare's As you like it.

SENO'CLAR. adj. [seni and oculus, Lat.]
Having six eyes.

Most animals are binocular, spiders octonocular, and some senocular. Derham's Physico Theology.

SENSA'TION. n. f. [sensation, Fr. sensatio, school Lat.] Perception by means of the senses.

Diversity of constitution, or other circumstances, vary the sensations; and to them of Java pepper is cold. Glennville's Sceptis.

The brain, distempered by a cold, beating against the root of the auditory nerve, and protracted to the tympanum, causes the sensation of noise.

This great source of most of the ideas we have, depending wholly upon our senses, and derived by them to the understanding, I call sensation. Locke.

When we are asleep, joy and sorrow give us more vigorous sensations of pain or pleasure than at any other time. Addison.

The happiest, upon a fair estimate, have stronger sensations of pain than pleasure. Rogers.

SENSE. n. f. [sens, Fr. sensus, Lat.]

1. Faculty or power by which external objects are perceived; the sight, touch, hearing, smell, taste.

This power sens, which from all ad doth bring
The colour, taste, and touch, and form, and sound,
The quantity and shape of every thing.

Within earth's centre or heaven's circle sound,
And though things, though numbers be,
But only five the sens's organs be;
And in those five all things their forms express,
Which we can touch, taste, feel, or hear, or see.

Then is the soul a nature, which contains
The power of sense within a greater tower,
Which doth employ and use the sens's pains;
But sits and rules him her private bow'r. Darwin.

Within them every power faculty
Of sense, whereby they hear, see, smell, touch, taste.

Of the five senses, two are usually and most properly called the senses of learning, as being most capable of receiving communication of thought and notions by selected signs; and these are hearing and seeing. Holder's Elements of Speech.

Perception by the senses; sensation.
In a living creature, though never to great, the senses and the affects of any one part of the body

Instantly make a transference throughout the whole.
Bacon's Natural History.

If we had nought but sense, then only they Should have found minds which have their senses
found;

But wisdom grows when senses do decay,
And folly most in quickest sense is found. Darwin.
Such is the mighty swiftness of your mind,
That, like the earth's, it leaves the sense behind.

3. Perception of intellect; apprehension of mind.

This Basiliss, having the quick sense of a lover, took as though his mistress had given him a secret reprehension. Sidney.

God, to remove his ways from human sense,
Plac'd heav'n from earth so far. Milton.

4. Sensibility; quickness or keenness of perception.

He should have liv'd,
Save that his riotous youth, with dangerous sense,
Might in the times to come have ta'en revenge.

5. Understanding; soundness of faculties; strength of natural reason.

Oppress'd nature sleeps:
This rest might yet have balm'd thy broken senses.

God hath endued mankind with powers and abilities which we call natural light and reason, and common sense. Bentley.

There's something previous ev'n to taste; 'tis
sense,
Good sense, which only is the gift of heaven,
And, though no science, fairly worth the seven:

A light within yourself you must perceive;
Jones and Le Nôtre have it not to give. Pope.

6. Reason; reasonable meaning.

He raves; his words are loose
As heaps of sand, and scattering wide from sense:
You see he knows not me, his natural father;
That now the wind is got into his head,
And turns his brains to frenzy.

7. Opinion; notion; judgment.

I speak my private but impartial sense
With freedom, and, I hope, without offence.

8. Consciousness; conviction.

In the due sense, to my want of learning, I only make a confession of my own faith. Dryden.

9. Moral perception.

Some are so hardened in wickedness, as to have no sense of the most friendly offices. L'Estrange.

10. Meaning; import.

In this sens, to be preserved from sin is not impossible. Hooker.

My hearty friends,
You take me in too dolorous a sense. Shakespeare.

A haughty presumption, that because we are encouraged to believe that in some sense all things are made for man, that therefore they are not made at all for the senses.

All before Richard I. is before time of memory;
and what is since, is, in a legal sense, within the time of memory.

In one sense it is, indeed, a building of gold and silver upon the foundation of Christianity. Tillotson.

When a word has been used in two or three senses, and has made a great inroad for error, drop one or two of those senses, and leave it only one remaining, and affix the other senses or ideas to other words. Watts's Logic.

SE'NSED. part. [from sense.] Perceived by the senses. A word not in use.

Let the teller tell me, why things must needs be to as his individual senses represent them: is he sure that objects are not otherwise sensed by others than they are by him? And why must his sense be the infallible criterion? It may be, what is white to us, is black to negroes. Glennville's Sceptis.

SENSEFUL. adj. [from sense and full.]

Reasonable; judicious. Not used, Men, otherwise senseful and ingenious, quote such things out of an author as would never pass in conversation. Norris.

SENSELESS. adj. [from sense.]

1. Wanting sense; wanting life; void of all life or perception.

The charm and venom which they drunk
Their blood with secret filth infected hath,
Being diffused through the senseless trunk,
That through the great contagion dreadful deadly stunk. Fairy Queen.

The ears are senseless that should give us hearing,
To tell him his commandment is fulfill'd.

You blocks! you worse than senseless things!

It is as repugnant to the idea of senseless matter, that it should put into itself sense, perception, and knowledge, as it is repugnant to the idea of a triangle, that it should put into itself greater angles than two right ones. Locke.

2. Unfeeling; wanting sympathy.

The senseless grave feels not your pious sorrows.

3. Unreasonable; stupid; doltish; block-ish.

They would repent this their senseless perverseness when it would be too late, and when they found themselves under a power that would destroy them.

If we be not extremely foolish, thankful, or senseless, a great joy is more apt to cure sorrow than a great trouble is. Taylor.

The great design of this author's book is to prove this, which I believe no man in the world was ever so senseless as to deny.

She saw her favour was misplac'd;
The fellows had a wretched taste:
She needs must tell them to their face,
They were a senseless stupid race. Swift.

4. Contrary to true judgment; contrary to reason.

It is a senseless thing, in reason, to think that one of these interests can stand without the other, when, in the very order of natural causes, government is preferred by religion. South's Sermons.

Other creatures, as well as monkeys, little wiser than they, desire their young by senseless tenderness, and too much embracing. Locke.

5. Wanting sensibility; wanting quickness or keenness of perception. Not in use.

draw Mars like a young Hippolitus, with an effeminate countenance, or that hot-spurred Harpalice in Virgil, proceedeth from a senseless and over-cold judgment. Planch.

6. Wanting knowledge; unconscious:
with of.

The wretch is drench'd too deep,
His soul is stupid, and his heart asleep,
Fatten'd in vice; so callous and so cruel,
He sins and sees not senseless of his loss. Dryden.

Hear this,
You unhouse'd, lawless, rambling libertines,
Senseless of any charm in love, beyond
The prostitution of a common bed. Southern.

SENSELESSLY. adv. [from senseless.] In a senseless manner; stupidly; unreasonably.

If any one should be found so senselessly arrogant as to suppose man alone knowing and wise but yet the product of mere ignorance and chance and that all the rest of the universe acted only that blind hap-hazard, I shall leave with him that very rational and emphatical rebuke of Tully.

SENSELESSNESS. n. f. [from senseless.]

Folly; unreasonableness; absurdity stupidity.

The senselessness of the tradition of the crocodile moving his upper jaw, is plain, from the articulation of the occiput with the neck, and the nether jaw with the upper. Green.

SENSIBILITY. n. f. [sensibilité, French.]

1. Quickness of sensation.

1. Quickness of perception; delicacy.
Modesty is a kind of quick and delicate feeling in the soul; it is such an exquisite sensibility, it warns a woman to shun the first appearance of every thing hurtful. Addison's Spectator.

2. SENSIBLE. adj. [sensible, French; sensibilis, Latin.]

1. Having the power of perceiving by the senses.

Would your cambric were as sensible as your finger, that you might leave pricking it for pity. Shakespeare.

These be those discourses of God, whose effects these thin live witness in themselves, the sensible in their sensible natures, the reasonable in their reasonable souls. Raleigh.

A blind man conceives not colours, but under the notion of some other sensible faculty. Glanville's Sceptis.

1. Perceptible by the senses.

By reason man attaineth unto the knowledge of things that are and are not sensible; it reflects, therefore, that we search how man attaineth unto the knowledge of such things, unsensible as are to be known. Locke.

Is this a dagger which I see before me, The handle toward my hand? Come, let me clutch thee. Shakespeare.

I have thee not, and yet I see thee still: Art thou not, fatal vision, sensible To feeling as to sight? Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The sense left and acquired in every sensible moment in such slow progressions, is so inconsiderable, that it cannot possibly move the sense. Glanville's Sceptis.

It is manifest that the heavens are void of all sensible resistance, and by consequence of all sensible matter. Newton.

The greater part of men are no otherwise moved than by sense, and have neither leisure nor ability to improve their power of reflection, as to be capable of conceiving the divine perfections, without the assistance of sensible objects. Rogers.

Air is sensible to the touch by its motion, and by its resistance to bodies moved in it. Arbutnot on Air.

2. Perceived by the mind.

Idleness was punished by so many stripes in public, and the disgrace was more sensible than the pain. Temple.

3. Perceiving by either mind or senses; having perception by the mind or senses.

This must needs remove The sensible of pain. Milton.

I saw you in the east at your first arising; I was as soon sensible as any of that light, when just shooting out, and beginning to travel upwards to the meridian. Dryden.

I do not say there is no soul in man, because he is not sensible of it in his sleep; but I do say, he cannot think at any time, waking or sleeping, without being sensible of it. Locke.

The verification is as beautiful as the description complete; every ear must be sensible of it. Broom's Notes on the Odyssey.

4. Having moral perception; having the quality of being affected by moral good or ill.

If thou wert sensible of courtesy, I should not make so great a show of zeal. Stak.

5. Having quick intellectual feeling; being easily or strongly affected.

Even I, the bold, the sensible of wrong, Restrained by shame, was forced to hold my tongue. Dryden.

6. Convinced; persuaded. A low use.

They are very sensible that they had better have pushed their conquests on the other side of the Adriatic; for then their territories would have lain together. Addison.

8. In low conversation it has sometimes the sense of reasonable; judicious; wise.

I have been tired with accounts from sensible men, furnished with matters of fact, which have happened within their own knowledge. Addison.

9. SENSIBLENESS. n. f. [from sensible.]

1. Possibility to be perceived by the senses.

2. Actual perception by mind or body.

3. Quickness of perception; sensibility.

The sensibleness of the eye renders it subject to pain, as also unfit to be dressed with sharp impressions. Stak.

4. Painful consciousness.

There is no condition of soul more wretched than that of the senseless obdurate sinner, being a kind of numbness of soul; and, contrariwise, this feeling and sensibleness, and sorrow for sin, the most vital quality. Hammond.

5. Judgment; reasonableness. An use not admitted but in conversation.

10. SENSI. adv. [from sensible.]

1. Perceptibly to the senses.

He is your brother, indeed; sensibly fed Of that felt blood that fill'd his veins to you. Stak.

A sudden pain in my right foot increased sensibly. Temple.

The salts of human urine may, by the violent motion of the blood, be turned alkaline, and even corrosive; and so they affect the fibres of the brain more sensibly than other parts. Arbutnot.

2. With perception of either mind or body.

3. Externally; by impression on the senses.

That church of Christ, which we properly term his body mystical, can be but one; neither can that one be sensibly discerned by any, inasmuch as the parts thereof are some in heaven already with Christ. Hooker.

4. With quick intellectual perception.

5. [In low language.] Judiciously; reasonably.

11. SENSITIVE. adj. [sensitif, Fr.] Having sense or perception, but not reason.

The sensitive faculty may have a sensitive love of some sensitive objects, which though moderated so as not to fall into sin, yet, through the nature of man's sense, may express itself more sensitively towards that inferior object than towards God: this is a piece of human frailty. Hammond.

All the actions of the sensitive appetite are in painting calid passions, because the soul is agitated by them, and because the body suffers and is sensibly altered. Dryden.

Bodies are such as are endowed with a vegetative soul, as plants; a sensitive soul, as animals; or a rational soul, as the body of man. Ray.

12. SENSITIVE PLANT. n. f. [mimosa, Latin.]

A plant.

The flower consists of one leaf, which is shaped like a funnel, having many stamens in the centre: these flowers are collected into a round head: from the bottom of the flower rises the pistillum, which afterwards becomes an oblong flat-jointed pod, which opens both ways, and contains in each partition one roundish seed. Of this plant the humble plants are a species, which are so called, because, upon being touched, the pedicle of their leaves falls downward; but the leaves of the sensitive plant are only contracted. Milton.

Vegetables have many of them some degrees of motion, and, upon the different application of other bodies to them, do very briskly alter their figure and motion, and so have obtained the name of sensitive plants, from a motion which has some resemblance to that which in animals follows upon sensation. Locke.

Whence does it happen that the plant, which will We name the sensitive, should move and feel? Whence know her leaves to answer her command, And with quick horror fly the neighbouring hand? Prior.

The sensitive plant is so called, because, as soon as you touch it, the leaf shrinks. Mortimer.

13. SENSITIVELY. adv. [from sensitive.] In a sensitive manner.

The sensitive faculty, through the nature of man's sense, may express itself more sensitively towards an inferior object than towards God: this is a piece of frailty. Hammond.

14. SENSORIUM. } n. f. [Latin.]

1. The part where the senses transmit their perceptions to the mind; the seat of sense.

Spiritual species, both visible and audible, will work upon the sensorium, though they move not any other body. Bacon.

As sound in a bell, or musical string, or other sounding body, is nothing but a trembling motion, and the air nothing but that motion propagated from the object, in the sensorium it is a sense of that motion under the form of sound. Newton.

Is not the sensorium of animals the place to which the sensitive substance is present, and into which the sensible species of things are carried through the nerves of the brain, that there they may be perceived by their immediate presence to that substance? Newton's Opticks.

2. Organ of sensation.

That we all have double sensories, two eyes, two ears, is an effectual contumacious of this atheistical sophism. Bentley.

15. SENSUAL. adj. [sensuel, French.]

1. Consisting in sense; depending on sense; affecting the senses.

Men in general are too partial in favour of a sensual appetite, to take notice of truth when they have found it. L'Estrange.

Far as creation's ample range extends, The scale of sensual, mental powers ascends. Pope.

2. Pleasing to the senses; carnal; not spiritual.

The greatest part of men are such as prefer their own private good before all things, even that good which is sensual before whatsoever is most divine. Hooker.

3. Devoted to sense; lewd; luxurious.

From amidst them rose Belial, the dissolute spirit that fell; The sensualist, and after Asmodeus The fleshiest, incubus. Milton.

No small part of virtue consists in abstaining from that wherein sensual men place their felicity. Astbury.

16. SENSUALIST. n. f. [from sensual.] A carnal person; one devoted to corporal pleasures.

Let atheists and sensualists satisfy themselves as they are able; the former of which will find, that, as long as reason keeps her ground, religion neither can nor will lose hers. Saurb.

17. SENSUALITY. n. f. [from sensual.] Devotedness to the senses; addiction to brutal and corporal pleasures.

But you are more intemperate in your blood Than Venus, or those pamper'd animals That rage in savage sensuality. Shakespeare.

Kill not her quickning power with surfeittings; Mar not her sense with sensuality:

Cast not her serious wit on idle things; Make not her free-will slave to vanity. Danvers.

Sensuality is one kind of pleasure, such an one as it is. Saurb.

They avoid dress, lest they should have affections tainted by any sensuality, and diverted from the love of him who is to be the only comfort and delight of their whole beings. Addison.

Impure and brutal sensuality was too much confirmed by the religion of those countries, where even Venus and Bacchus had their temples. Bentley.

18. SENSUALIZE. v. a. [from sensual.]

To sink to sensual pleasures; to degrade the mind into subjection to the senses.

Not to suffer one's self to be sensualized by pleasures. Locke.

ures, like those who were changed into brutes by Circe.

SENSUALLY. adv. [from sensual.] In a sensual manner.

SENSUOUS. adj. [from sense.] Tender; pathetic; full of passion. Not in use.
To this poetry would be made precedent, as being less subtle and fine; but more simple, sensuous, and passionate. Milton.

SENT. The participle passive of send.
I make a decree that all Israel go with thee; so far as thou art sent of the king. Exod. vii. 14.

SENTENCE. n. f. [sentence, Fr. sententia, Lat.]

1. Determination or decision, as of a judge civil or criminal.

The rule of voluntary agents on earth is the sententia that reason giveth, concerning the goodness of those things which they are to do. Hooker.

If we have neither voice from heaven, that so pronounceeth of them, neither sententia of men grounded upon such manifest and clear proof, that they, in whose hands it is to alter them, may likewise infallibly, even in heart and conscience, judge them so; upon necessity to urge alteration, is to trouble and disturb without necessity. Hooker.
How will I give sententia against them. Jeremiah, iv. 12.

If matter of fact breaks out with too great an evidence to be denied, why, still there are other lentatives, that friendship will apply, before it will be brought to the decretory rigours of a condemning sententia. South's Sermons.
Let him set out some of Luther's works, that by them we may pass sententia upon his doctrines. Atterbury.

2. It is usually spoken of condemnation pronounced by the judge; doom.
By the consent of all laws, in capital causes, the evidence must be full and clear; and if so, where one man's life is in question, what say we to a war, which is ever the sententia of death upon many? Bacon's Holy War.
What rests but that the mortal sententia pass? Milton.

3. A maxim; an axiom, generally moral.
A sententia may be defined a moral instruction couched in a few words. Broome's Notes on Odyssy.

4. A short paragraph; a period in writing.

An excellent spirit, knowledge, understanding, and shewing of hard sentences were found in Daniel. Dan. v. 12.

TO SENTENCE. v. a. [sententia, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To pass the last judgment on any one.
After this cold consideration, sententia me; And, as you are a king, speak in your state, What I have done that misbecame my place. Shakespeare.
Come the mild judge and intercessor both To sententia man. Milton.

2. To condemn; to doom to punishment.
Could that decree from our brother come? Nature herself is sententia d in your doom: Piety is no more. Dryden.
Idleness, sententia d by the decurions, was punished by so many stripes. Templ.

SENTENTIALLY. n. f. [from sententia.]

Comprehension in a sentence.
Vulgar precepts in sententia carry with them nothing above the line, or beyond the extemporary sententia of common conceits with us. Broome's Vulgar Errors.

SENTENTIOUS. adj. [sententia, Fr. from sententia.]

1. Resounding with sentences, axioms, and maxims, short and energetic.

It is very swift and sententious. Shakespeare's As you like it.

Eyes are vocal; tears have tongues; Sententia shows! O let them fall!

Their evidence is rhetorical. Crashaw.
Eloquence, with all her pomp and charms, Foretold us useful and sententia truths. Waller.

How he apes his fire, Ambitiously sententia! Addison's Cato.

2. Comprising sentences.

The making of figures being tedious, and requiring much room, put men first upon contracting them, as by the most ancient Egyptian monuments it appears they did: next, instead of sententia marks, to think of verbal, such as the Chinese still retain. Grew's Cosmologia.

SENTENTIALLY. adv. [from sententia.] In short sentences; with striking brevity.

They describe her in part finely and elegantly, and in part gravely and *sententia*ly: they say, look how many feathers she hath, so many eyes she hath underneath. Bacon's Essays.

Nausica delivers her judgment *sententia*ly, to give it more weight. Broome.

SENTENTIOUSNESS. n. f. [from sententia.] Pithiness of sentences; brevity with strength.

The Moda I esteem for the gravity and *sententia*ness of it, which he himself concludes to be suitable to a tragedy. Dryden.

SENTERY. n. f. [This is commonly written sentry, corrupted from sentinel.] One who is set to watch in a garrison, or in the outlines of an army.

What strength, what art, can then Suffice, or what evasion bear him safe Through the strict senteries, and stations thick Of angels watching round? Milton.

SENTIENT. adj. [sentiens, Latin.] Perceiving; having perception.

This acting of the sentient phantasy is performed by a presence of sense, as the horse is under the sense of hunger, and that, without any formal syllogism, presseth him to eat. Hale.

SENTIENT. n. f. [from the adjective.] He that has perception.

If the sentient be carried, passibus aequis, with the body whose motion it would observe, supposing it regular, the sentient is inflexible. Glauville's Sceptis.

SENTIMENT. n. f. [sentiment, Fr.]

1. Thought; notion; opinion.

The consideration of the reason why they are annexed to so many other ideas, serving to give us due sentiments of the wisdom and goodness of the sovereign Disposer of all things, may not be unsuitable to the main end of these enquiries. Locke.
Alike to council or th' assembly came, With equal souls and sentiments the same. Pope.

2. The sense considered distinctly from the language or things: a striking sentence in a composition.

Those who could no longer defend the conduct of Cato, praised the sentiments. Dennis.

SENTINEL. n. f. [sentinelle, Fr. from sentio, Lat.] One who watches or keeps guard to prevent surprize.

Norfolk, hie thee to thy charge; Use careful watch, chuse trusty sentinels. Shakespeare's Richard III.

Counsellors are not commonly so united, but that one counsellor keepeth sentinel over another: so that if any do counsel out of faction or private ends, it commonly comes to the king's ear. Bacon's Essays.

First, the two eyes, which have the seeing power, stand as one watchman, spy, or sentinel, Being plac'd aloft, within the head's high tower; And though both see, yet both but one thing tell. Dayies.

Love is our citadel's resort; Through those deceitful fallacies; Our sentinels betray our forts. Danbarn.

The sentinels are situated in the head, as sentinels in a watchtower, to receive and convey to the soul the impressions of external objects. Ray on the Creation.

Perhaps they had sentinels waking while they slept; but even this would be unsoldierlike. Broome.

SENTRY. n. f. [corrupted, I believe, from sentinel.]

1. A watch; a sentinel; one who watches in a garrison, or army, to keep them from surprize.

If I do send, dispatch Those sentries to our aid; the rest will serve For a short holding. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

The youth of hell strict guard may keep, And fet their sentries to the utmost deep. Dryden.

One goose they had, 'twas all they could allow, A wakeful sentry, and on duty now. Dryden.

2. Guard; watch; the duty of a sentry.

Thou, whose nature cannot sleep, O'er my slumbers sentry keep; Guard me 'gainst those watchful foes, Whose eyes are open while mine close. Brown.
Here toils and death, and death's half-brother, sleep, Forms terrible to view, their sentry keep. Dryden.

SEPARABILITY. n. f. [from separable.]

The quality of admitting disunion or discernption.

Separability is the greatest argument of real distinction. Glauville.

The greatest argument of real distinction is separability, and actual separation; for nothing can be separated from itself. Norris.

SEPARABLE. adj. [separable, Fr. separabilis, Lat. from separate.]

1. Succceptive of disunion; discernible.

The infusions and decoctions of plants contain the most separable parts of the plants, and convey not only their nutritious but medicinal qualities into the blood. Arbuthnot.

2. Possible to be disjoined from something: with from.

Expansion and duration have this farther agreement, that tho' they are both considered by us as having parts, yet their parts are not separable one from another. Locke.

SEPARABLENESS. n. f. [from separable.]

Capableness of being separated.

Trials permit me not to doubt of the separableness of a yellow tincture from gold. Boyle.

TO SEPARATE. v. a. [separo, Lat. separar, Fr.]

1. To break; to divide into parts.

2. To disunite; to disjoin.
I'll to England.
—To Ireland, I: our separated fortunes Shall keep us both the safer. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Resolv'd, Rather than death, or aught than death more dread, Shall separate us. Milton.

3. To sever from the rest.

Can a body be inflammable, from which it would puzzle a chymist to separate an inflammable ingredient? Boyle.
Death from sin no power can separate. Milton.

4. To set apart; to segregate.

Separate me Barnabas and Saul, for the work whereunto I have called them. Acts, xiii. 2.
David separated to the service those who should prophesy. 1 Chron. xxv. 1.

5. To withdraw.

Separate thyself from me: if thou wilt take the left, I will go to the right. Gen. xiii. 9.

TO SEPARATE. v. n. To part; to be disunited.

When there was not room enough for their herds

Berds to feed, they by consent separated, and enlarged their pasture. Locke

SE'PARATE. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Divided from the rest.

'Twere hard to conceive an eternal watch whose pieces were never separate one from another, nor ever in any other form. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

2. Disjoined; withdrawn.

Eve separate he with'd. Milton.

3. Secret; secluded.

In a secret vale the Trojan fies

A separate grove. Dryd.

4. Disunited from the body; disengaged from corporeal nature. An emphatical sense.

Whatever ideas the mind can receive and contemplate without the help of the body, it can retain without the help of the body too; or else the soul, or any separate spirit, will have but little advantage by thinking. Locke.

SE'PARATELY. adv. [from separate.]

Apart; singly; not in union; distinctly; particularly.

It is of singular use to princes, if they take the opinions of their council both separately and together; for private opinion is more free, but opinion before others is more reserved. Bacon.

If you admit of many figures, conceive the whole together, and not every thing separately and in particular. Dryden.

SE'PARATENESS. n. f. [from separate.]

The state of being separate.

SEPARA'TION. n. f. [separatio, Lat. separation, Fr. from separate.]

1. The act of separating; disjunction.

'They have a dark opinion, that the soul doth live after the separation from the body. Abbot.

Any part of our bodies, vitally united to that which is conscious in us, makes a part of ourselves; but upon separation from the vital union, by which that consciousness is communicated, that, which a moment since was part of ourselves, is now no more so. Locke.

2. The state of being separate; disunion.

As the confusion of tongues was a mark of separation, so the being of one language was a mark of union. Bacon.

3. The chemical analysis, or operation of disuniting things mingled.

A fifteenth part of silver, incorporate with gold, will not be recovered by any matter of separation, unless you put a greater quantity of silver, which is the last refuge in separations. Bacon.

4. Divorce; disjunction from a married state.

Did you not hear

A buzzing of a separation

Between the king and Cath'rine? Shakespeare.

SE'PARATIST. n. f. [separatiste, Fr. from separate.]

One who divides from the church; a schismatick; a seceder.

The anabaptists, separatists, and sectaries tenets are full of schism, and inconsistent with monachy. Bacon.

Our modern separatists pronounce all those heretical, or carnal, from whom they have withdrawn. Decay of Piety.

Says the separatist, if those, who have the rule over you, should command you any thing about church affairs, you ought not, in conscience, to obey them. South's Sermons.

SEPARA'TOR. n. f. [from separate.] One who divides; a divider.

SE'PARATORY. adj. [from separate.] Used in separation.

The most conspicuous gland of an animal is the system of the guts, where the lacteals are the emissary vessels, or separatory ducts. Coryne's Philosophical Principles.

SE'PILIBLE. adj. [sepio, Lat.] That may be buried. Bailey.

SE'PIMENT. n. f. [sepimentum, Lat.] A hedge; a fence. Bailey.

SEPOSI'TION. n. f. [sepono, Lat.] The act of setting apart; segregation.

SEPT. n. f. [septum, Lat.] A clan; a race; a family; a generation. A word used only with regard or allusion to Ireland, and, I suppose, Irish.

This judge, being the lord's brehon, adjudgeth a better share unto the lord of the soil, or the head of that sept, and also unto himself for his judgment a greater portion, than unto the plaintiffs. Spenser on Ireland.

The English forces were ever too weak to subdue so many warlike nations, or septs, of the Irish, as did possess this island. Davies on Ireland.

The true and ancient Russians, a sept whom he had met with in one of the provinces of that vast empire, were white like the Danes. Boyle.

SEPTA'NGULAR. adj. [septem and angulus, Latin.] Having seven corners or sides.

SEPT'E'MBER. n. f. [Latin; Septembre, Fr.] The ninth month of the year; the seventh from March.

September hath its name from being the seventh month from March: he is drawn with a merry and cheerful countenance, in a purple robe. Peacocks on Draining.

SE'PTENARY. adj. [septenarius, Latin.]

Consisting of seven.

Every controversy has seven questions belonging to it; though the order of nature seems too much neglected by a confinement to this septenary number. Watts.

SEPT'E'NARY. n. f. The number seven.

The days of men are cast up by septenarius, and every seventh year conceived to carry some altering character in temper of mind or body. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

These constitutions of Moses, that proceed so much upon a septenary, or number of seven, have no reason in the nature of the thing. Burnet.

SEPT'ENNIAL. adj. [septennius, Lat.]

1. Lasting seven years.

2. Happening once in seven years.

Being once dispensed with for his septennial visit, by a holy instrument from Petropolis, he resolved to govern them by subaltern ministers. Hewel's Pical Forest.

SEPTENTRION. n. f. [French; septentrion, Latin.] The north.

Thou art as opposite to every good As the antipodes are unto us, Or as the south to the septentrion. Shak. Henry VI.

SEPT'E'NTRION. } adj. [septentrionalis, Latin; septentrional, French.] Northern.

Back'd with a ridge of hills, That screen'd the fruits of th' earth and seats of men

From cold septentrion blasts. Milton's Par. Reg.

If the spring Preceding should be delicate of rain, Or blast septentrional with brushing wings

Sweep up the smoky mists and vapours damp, Then woe to mortals! Philips.

SEPTENTRIONA'LITY. n. f. [from septentrional.] Northerliness.

SEPT'E'NTRIONALLY. adv. [from septentrional.] Towards the north; northerly.

If they be powerfully excited, and equally let fall, they commonly sink down, and break the water, at that extreme whereat they were septentrionally excited. Brown.

SEPT'E'NTRIONATE. v. m. [from septentrion, Latin.] To tend northerly.

Steel and good iron, never excited by the loadstone, septentrionate at one extreme, and australize at another. Brown.

SE'PTICAL. adj. [septicus, Lat.] Having power to promote or produce putrefaction.

As a septic medicine, Galen commanded the ashes of a salamander. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

SEPTILA'TERAL. adj. [septem and lateris, Lat.] Having seven sides.

By an equal interval they make seven triangles, the bases whereof are the seven sides of a septilateral figure, described within a circle. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

SEPTUA'GENARY. adj. [septuagenarius, Lat. septuagenaire, Fr.] Consisting of seventy.

The three hundred years of John of Kings, or Nestor, cannot afford a reasonable encouragement beyond Moses's septuagenary determination. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

SEPTUAGE'SIMAL. adj. [septuagesimus, Lat.] Consisting of seventy.

In our abridged and septuagesimal age, it is very rare to behold the fourth generation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

SE'PTUAGINT. n. f. [septuaginta, Latin.]

The old Greek version of the Old Testament, so called as being supposed the work of seventy-two interpreters.

Which way soever you try, you shall find the product great enough for the extent of this earth; and if you follow the septuagint chronology, it will still be far higher. Burnet.

SE'PTUPLE. adj. [septuplex, Lat.] Seven times as much. A technical term.

SEPU'LCHRAL. adj. [sepulchral, Fr. sepulchralis, from sepulchrum, Latin.] Relating to burial; relating to the grave; monumental.

Whilst our souls negotiate there, We like sepulchral statues lay; All day the same our postures were, And we laid nothing all the day. Mine eye hath found that sad sepulchral rock; That was the casket of heav'n's richest store. Milton.

Sepulchral lyes our holy walls to grace, And new-year odes. Pope's Dunciado.

SE'PULCHRE. n. f. [sepulchre, Fr. sepulchrum, Latin.] A grave; a tomb.

To entail him and 's heirs unto the crown, What is it but to make thy sepulchre? Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Flies and spiders get a sepulchre in amber, more durable than the monument and embalming of any king. Bacon.

There, where the virgin's son his doctrine taught, His miracles, and our redemption, wrought; Where I, by thee inspir'd, his praises sung, And on his sepulchre my offering hung. Sandys.

Perpetual lamps for many hundred years have continued burning, without supply, in the sepulchres of the ancients. Wilkins.

If not one common sepulchre contains Our bodies, or one urn our last remains, Yet Ceyx and Alcyon shall join. Dryden.

TO SE'PULCHRE. v. a. [from the noun.] It is accented on the second syllable by Shakespeare and Milton; on the first, more properly, by Johnson and Prior. To bury; to entomb.

Go to thy lady's grave, and call her thence; Or, at the least, in hers sepulchre thine. Shaksp.

I am glad to see that time survive, Where merit is not sepulchred alive; Where good men's virtues them to honours bring, And not to dangers. Ben Jonson.

Thou sepulchred in such pomp dost lie, That kings for such a tomb would wish to die. Milton.

Disparted streams flow from their channel's side,
And, deep forebarg'd, by sandy mountains lie Obscurely sepulchred. Prior.

SEPULTURE. n. f. [sepulture, Fr. sepulture, Lat.] Interment; burial.

That Niobe, weeping over her children, was turned into a stone, was nothing else but that during her life she erected over her sepulchres a marble tomb of her own. Brown.

Where we may royal sepulture prepare;
With speed to Melchinda bring relief,
Recall her spirits, and moderate her grief. Dryd.
In England, sepulture or burial of the dead may be deferred and put off for the debts of the person deceased. Ayliff.

SEQUALICIOUS. adj. [sequalis, Lat.]

1. Following; attendant.

Orpheus could lead the savage race,
And trees uprooted left their place,
Sequalicious of the lyre;
But bright Cecilia rais'd the wonder higher:
When to her organ vocal breath was giv'n,
An angel heard,
And straight appear'd,
Mistaking earth for heav'n. Dryd.
Above those superstitious horrors that enslave
The fond sequalicious herd, to mystick faith
And blind amazement prone, th' enlighten'd few
The glorious stranger hail. Tomlins.

2. Ductile; pliant.

In the greater bodies the forge was easy, the matter being ductile and sequalicious, and obedient to the hand and stroke of the artificer, and apt to be drawn, formed, or moulded. Ray.

SEQUALICITY. n. f. [sequax, Lat.]
Ductility; roughness.

Matter whereof creatures are produced, hath a closeness, lensor, and sequalicity. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

SEQUEL. n. f. [sequella, Fr. sequela, Lat.]

1. Conclusion; succeeding part.

If black scandal or foul-tac'd reproach
Attend the sequel of your imposition,
Your mere enforcement shall acquaintance me.

Shakespeare's Richard III.

Was he not a man of wisdom? Yes, but he was poor. But was he not also successful? True, but still he was poor: grant this, and you cannot keep off that unavoidable sequel in the next verse, the poor man's wisdom is despised. South.

2. Consequence; event.

Let any principal thing, as the sun or the moon, but once cease, fail, or twerve, and who doth not easily conceive that the sequel thereof would be ruin both to itself and whatsoever de-pendeth on it? Hooker.

1. In this he put two weights,
The sequel each of putting and of fight. Milton.

3. Consequence inferred; consequential-ness.

What sequel is there in this argument? An archdeacon is the chief deacon. Ergo, he is only a deacon. Whiggist.

SEQUENCE. n. f. [sequor, Lat.]

1. Order of succession. An elegant word, but little used.

How art thou a king,
But by fair sequence and succession? Sh. Rich. II.

2. Series; arrangement; method.

The cause proceedeth from a precedent sequence and series of the seasons of the year.
Bacon's Natural History.

SEQUENT. adj. [sequens, Latin.]

1. Following; succeeding.

Let my trial be mine own confession.
Immediate sentence then and sequent death,
Is all the grace I beg. Shakspeare. Meas. for Meas.
There he dies, and leaves his race growing into a nation; and now grown suspected to a sequent king, who seeks To stop their overgrowth. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Consequential.

SEQUEST. n. f. [from the adjective.]
A follower. Not in use.

Here he hath framed a letter to a sequent of the stranger queen's, which accidentally miscarried.
Shakspeare.

TO SEQUESTER. v. a. [sequestro, Fr.
sequestar, Spanish; sequestro, low Latin.]

1. To separate from others for the sake of privacy.

Why are you sequester'd from all your train?
Shakspeare.

To the which place a poor sequester'd stag,
That from the hunter's aim had taken a hurt,
Did come to languish. Shakspeare. As you like it.

In shady bow'r
More laured and sequester'd, though but feign'd, Pan or Sylvanus never slept. Milton.
Ye sacred Nine! that all my soul posside,
Whose raptures sue me, and whose vision blest,
Beat me, oh beat me, to sequester'd scenes
Of bowly mazes, and surrounding greens. Pope.

2. To put aside; to remove.

Although I had wholly sequester'd my civil affairs, yet I set down, out of experience in business, and conversation in books, what I thought pertinent to this affair. Bacon.

3. To withdraw; to segregate.

A thing as seasonable in grief as in joy, as decent being added unto actions of greatest weight and solemnity, as being used when men most sequester themselves from action. Hooker.

4. To set aside from the use of the owner to that of others: as, his annuity is sequestered to pay his creditors.

5. To deprive of possessions.

It was his taylor and his cook, his fine fashions and his French ragouts, which sequestered him;
and, in a word, he came by his poverty as sinfully
as some usually do by their riches. South.

SEQUESTERABLE. adj. [from sequestrate.]

1. Subject to privation.

2. Capable of separation.

Hartthorn, and divers other bodies belonging to the animal kingdom, abound with a not uneasy sequesterable salt. Boyle.

TO SEQUESTRATE. v. n. To sequester; to separate.

In general contagions, more perish for want of necessaries than by the malignity of the disease, they being sequestered from mankind.

Arbutnot on Air.

SEQUESTRATION. n. f. [sequestration, Fr.
from sequestrate.]

1. Separation; retirement.

His addiction was to courses vain,
I never noted in him any study,
Any retirement, any sequestration
From open haunts and popularity. Shak. Hen. V.

There must be leisure, retirement, solitude, and a sequestration of a man's self from the noise of the world; for truth seems to be seen by eyes much fixt upon interior objects. South.

2. Disunion; disjunction.

The metals remain unsevered, the fire only dividing the body into smaller particles, hindering rest and continuity, without any sequestration of elementary principles. Boyle.

3. State of being set aside.

Since Henry Monmouth first began to reign,
Before whose glory I was great in arms,
This loathsome sequestration have I had.
Shakspeare's Henry VI.

4. Deprivation of the use and profits of a possession.

If there be a single spot in the globe more bar-ren, the rector or vicar may be obliged, by the caprice or pique of the bishop, to build upon it, under pain of sequestration. Swift.

SEQUESTRA TOR. n. f. [from sequestrare.]
One who takes from a man the profit of his possessions.

I am fallen into the hands of publicans and sequestrators, and they have taken all from me.

Taylor.

SERAGLIO. n. f. [Italian; perhaps an Oriental original. The g is lost in the pronunciation.] A house of women kept for debauchery.

There is a great deal more solid content to be found in a constant course of well living, than in the voluptuousness of a seraglio. Norris.

SERAPH. n. f. [שֵׁרָפִים] One of the orders of angels.

He is infinitely more remote, in the real excellence of his nature, from the highest and per-fectest of all created beings, than the purest seraph is from the most contemptible part of matter, and consequently must infinitely exceed what our narrow understandings can conceive of him. Locke.

As full, as perfect, in vile men that mourns,
As the pure seraph that adores and burns. Pope.

SERAPHICAL. adj. [seraphique, Fr. from SERAPHIC. } seraph.]

1. Angelick; angelical.

Love is curious of little things, desiring to be of angelical purity, of perfect innocence, and ser-aphical fervour. Taylor.

Seraphic arms and trophies. Milnes.

2. Pure; refined from sensuality.

'Tis to the world a secret yet,
Whether the nymph, to please her swain,
Talks in a high romantic strain;
Or whether he at last descends
To like with less seraphick ends. Swift.

SERAPHIM. n. f. [This is properly the plural of seraph, and therefore cannot have s added; yet, in compliance with our language, seraphims is sometimes written.] Angels of one of the heavenly orders.

To thee cherubim and seraphim continually do cry. Common Prayer.

Then flew one of the seraphims unto me, having a live coal in his hand. Isaiah, vi. 6.

Of seraphim another row. Milton.

SERE. adj. [reapuan, Saxon, to dry.] Dry;

withered; no longer green. See SEAR.

The mules, that were wont green hays to wear,
Now bringen bitter elder-branches here. Spenser.

He is deformed, crooked, old, and here,
Ill sic'd, worse bodied, shapeless every where;
Vitious, ungente. Shakspeare's Comedy of Errors.

Ere this diurnal star
Leave cold the night, how we his gather'd beams Reflected may with matter here lament. Milton.

They fire wood from the rotten hedges took,
And seeds of latent fire from flints provoke.

Dryden.

On a few branches,
Low bending to the bank, I sat me down, Musing and still. Rowe's Royal Convert.

SERR. n. f. [Of this word I know not the etymology, nor, except from this passage, the meaning. Can it come, like seers, from reapuan, Saxon, to cut?]
Claw; talon.

Two eagles,
That mounted on the winds, together still
Their strokes extended; but arriving now
Amidst the council, over every brow Shook their thick wings, and threat'ning death's cold fears,
Their necks and cheeks tore with their eager fers. Chapman.

SERENADE. n. f. [serenade, Fr. serenata, Italian; whence, in Milton, serenate from serenus, Latin; the lovers commonly attending their mistresses in fair nights,] Musick

Musick or songs with which ladies are entertained by their lovers in the night.

Mixt dance, or wanton mask, or midnight ball, Or serenate, which the starv'd lover sings To his proud fair; best quitted with disdain. Mil.
Foolish swallow, what dost thou
So often at my window do,
With thy tuneless serenade? Cowley.
Shall I the neighbours rightly rest invade,
At her deaf doors, with some vile serenade? Dryder.

Will fancies he never should have been the man he is, had not he broke windows, and disturbed honest people with his midnight serenades, when he was a young fellow. Addison.

To SERENADE. v. a. [from the noun.]

To entertain with nocturnal musick.

He continued to serenade her every morning, till the queen was charmed with his harmony. Spettator.

SERENE. adj. [seren, Fr. serenus, Lat.]

1. Calm; placid; quiet.

Spirits live inspir'd
In regions mild of calm and serene air. Milton.
The moon, serene in glory, mounts the sky. Pope.

2. Unruffled; undisturbed; even of temper; peaceful or calm of mind; shewing a calm mind.

There wanted yet a creature might erect
His stature, and upright with front serene Govern the rest. Milton.

Exciting them, by a due remembrance of all that is past, unto future circumspection, and a serene expectation of the future life. Greene's Cosmol.

Gutta SERENA. n. f. An obstruction in the optic nerve.

These eyes that roll in vain,
So thick a drop serene hath quench'd their orbs. Milton.

SERENE. n. f. [from the adjective.] A calm damp evening.

Wherever death doth please to appear,
Seas, serenes, fowls, shot, sickness, all are there. Ben Jonson.

To SERENE. v. a. [serener, Fr. sereno, Latin.]

1. To calm; to quiet.

2. To clear; to brighten. Not proper.

Take care
Thy muddy bev'rage to serene, and drive
Precipitant the baser rosy lees. Philips.

SERENELY. adv. [from serene.]

1. Calmly; quietly.

The setting sun now shone serenely bright. Pope.

2. With unruffled temper; coolly.

Whatever practical rule is generally broken, cannot be supposed innate; it being impossible that men would, without shame or fear, confidently and serenely break a rule, which they could not but evidently know that God had set up. Locke.

The nymph did like the scene appear,
Serenely pleasant, calmly fair: Prior.

SERENENESS. n. f. [from serene.] Serenity.

SERENITUDE. n. f. [from sereno.] Calmness; coolness of mind. Not in use.

From the equal distribution of the phlegmatick humour will flow quietude and serenitude in the affections. Watson.

SERENITY. n. f. [serenité, Fr. from serenus, Latin.]

1. Calmness; mild temperature.

In the constitution of a perpetual equinox, the best part of the globe would be desolate; and as to that little that would be inhabited, there is no reason to expect that it would constantly enjoy that admired calm and serenity. Bentley.

Pure serenity space
Induces thought, and contemplation still. Thomson.

2. Peace; quietness; not disturbance.

A general peace and serenity newly succeeded a general trouble and cloud throughout all his kingdoms. Temple.

3. Evenness of temper; coolness of mind.

I cannot see how any men should ever transgress those moral rules, with confidence and serenity, were they innate, and stamped upon their minds. Locke.

SERGE. n. f. [serge, French; xerger, Spanish, which Covarruvias derives from xirica, Arabick; Skinner from serge, German, a mat.] A kind of woollen cloth

The same wool one man felts into a hat, another weaves into cloth, another into kusey or serge, and another into arras. Hale.

Ye weavers, all your shuttles throw,
And bid broad-cloths and serges grow. Gay.

SERGEANT. n. f. [sergent, French; sergente, Italian; from serviens, Latin.]

1. An officer whose business it is to execute the commands of magistrates.

Had I but time, as this fell sergent, Death,
I strict in his arrest, oh! I could tell. Sh. Haml.
When it was day, the magistrates sent the sergeants, saying, Let these men go. Acts, xvi. 35.

2. A petty officer in the army.

This is the sergent,
Who like a good and hardy soldier fought. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

3. A lawyer of the highest rank under a judge.

None should be made sergeants, but such as probably might be held fit to be judges afterwards. Bacon.

4. It is a title given to some of the king's servants: as, sergeant chiburgeon; that is, a chiburgeon servant to the king.

SERGEANTRY. n. f. [from sergeant.]

Grand sergeantry is that where one holdeth lands of the king by service, which he ought to do in his own person unto him: as to bear the king's banner or his spear, or to lead his host, or to be his marshal, or to blow a horn, when he seeth his enemies invade the land; or to find a man at arms to fight within the four seas, or else to do it himself; or to bear the king's sword before him at his coronation, or on that day to be his sewer, carver, butler, or chamberlain. Petit sergeantry is where a man holdeth land of the king, to yield him yearly some small thing toward his wars; as a sword, dagger, bow, knife, spear, pair of gloves of mail, a pair of spurs, or such like. Covell.

SERGEANTSHIP. n. f. [from sergeant.]

The office of a sergeant.

SERIES. n. f. [serie, Fr. series, Latin.]

1. Sequence; order.

Draw out that antecedent, by reflecting briefly upon the text, as it lies in the series of the epistle. Ward of Infidelity.

The chasm of the correspondence I cannot supply, having destroyed too many letters to preserve any series. Pope.

2. Succession; course.

This is the series of perpetual woe,
Which thou, alas! and thine, are born to know. Pope.

SERIOUS. adj. [serieux, Fr. serius, Lat.]

1. Grave; solemn; not volatile; not light of behaviour.

Ah! my friends! while we laugh, all things are serious round about us: God is serious, who exerciseth patience towards us; Christ is serious, who shed his blood for us; the Holy Ghost is serious, who striveth against the obstinacy of our hearts; the Holy Scriptures bring to our ears the most serious things in the world; the Holy Sacraments represent the most serious and awful matters; the whole creation is serious in serving God, and very all that are in heaven or hell are serious: how then can we be gay? To give these excellent words their full force, it should be known that the came not from the priesthood, but the court; and from a courtier as eminent as England ever boasted. Young.

2. Important; weighty; not trifling.

I'll hence to London on a serious matter. Shakespeare's Henry V.

There's nothing serious in mortality; All is but toys. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

SERIOUSLY. adv. [from serious.] Gravely; solemnly; in earnest; without levity.

It cannot but be matter of very dreadful consideration to any one, sober and in his wits, to think seriously with himself, what honour and confusion must need, surprise that man, at the last day of account, who had led his whole life by one rule when God intends to judge him by another. South.

All laugh to find Unthinking plannets to overspread thy mind,
That thou couldst seriously persuade the crowd
To keep their oaths, and to believe a God. Dryd.

Justin Martyr, Tertullian, Lactantius, and Arnobius, tell us, that this martyrdom sort of al made them seriously inquisitive into that religion which could endue the mind with so much strength and overcome the fear of death, nay, raise an earnest desire of it, though it appeared in all its terrors. Addison.

SERIOUSNESS. n. f. [from serious.] Gravity; solemnity; earnest attention.

That spirit of religion and seriousness vanished all at once, and a spirit of libertinism and profaneness started up in the room of it. Atterb. Sermons.

The youth was received at the door by a servant who then conducted him with great silence and seriousness to a long gallery, which was darkened a noon-day. Addison's Spectator.

SERMOCINATION. n. f. [sermocinatio, Latin.] The act or practice of making speeches.

SERMOCINATOR. n. f. [sermocinator, Lat.] A preacher; a speechmaker.

These obsequious sermocinators make easy impression upon the minds of the vulgar. Hume.

SERMON. n. f. [sermon, Fr. sermo, Latin.]

A discourse of instruction pronounced by a divine for the edification of the people.

As for our sermons, be they never so sound and perfect, God's word they are not, as the sermon of the prophets were; no, they are but ambiguously turned his word, because his word is commonly the subject whereof they treat, and must be the rule whereby they are framed. Hooke.

This our life, exempt from publick haunt,
Finds tongues in trees, books in the running brook
Sermons in stones, and good in every thing. Shakespeare.

Sermons he heard, yet not so many
As left no time to practise any:

He heard them reverently, and then
His practice preach'd them o'er again. Cressbon.
Many, while they have preached Christ in the sermons, have read a lecture of atheism in the practice. South.

His preaching much, but more his practice wrought;

A living sermon of the truths he taught. Dryden.
To SERMON. v. a. [sermoneo, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To discourse as in a sermon.

Some would rather have good discipline delivered plainly by way of precept, or sermoned large, than thus cloudily intwined in allegoric devices. Spenser.

2. To tutor; to teach dogmatically; to lesson.

Come, sermon me no farther:
No villainous bounty yet hath pass'd my heart. Shakespeare's Timon.

SER MOUNTAIN or Seseli. n. f. [flesx, Lat.]

A plant.

SEROSITY. n. f. [serosité, Fr.] Thin or watery part of the blood.

In these the salt and lxxivated serosity is divided between the gurs and the bladder; but it remains undivided in birds. Brown.

The tumour of the throat, which occasions the difficulty of swallowing and breathing, proceeds from a serosity obstructing the glands, which may be watery, iclenatose, or scirrhous, according to the viscosity of the humour. Arbutnot.

SEROUS. adj. [seroux, French; serofus, Latin.]

Thin; watery. Used of the part of the blood which separates in congelation from the grumous or red part.

1. Adapted to the serum.

This disease is commonly an extravasation of serum, received in some cavity of the body; for there may be also a droply by a dilatation of the focous vessels, as that in the ovarium. Arbutnot on Diet.

SERPENT. n. f. [serpens, Latin.] An animal that moves by undulation without legs. They are often venomous. They are divided into two kinds: the wiper, which brings young; and the snake, that lays eggs.

She was arrayed all in lily white,
And in her right hand bore a cup of gold,
With wine and water fill'd up to the height;
In which a serpent did himself enfold,
That horror made to all that did behold.

Fairy Queen.

She struck me with her tongue,
Most serpent like, upon the very heart.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

They, or under ground, or circuit wide,
With serpent error wand'ring, found their way.

Milton.

The chief I challeng'd: he, whose practis'd wit
Knew all the serpent maces of deceit,
Eludes my search.

Pope's Odyssey.

SERPENTINE. adj. [serpentinus, Lat. from serpens.]

1. Resembling a serpent.

I craved of him to lead me to the top of this rock, with meaning to free him from so serpentine a companion as I am.

Sidney.

This of ours is described with legs, wings, a serpentine and winding tail, and a crest or comb somewhat like a cock.

Brown.

Nothing wants, but that thy shape
Like his, and colour serpentine, may shew Thy inward fraud.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

The figures and their parts ought to have a serpentine and flaming form naturally: these sorts of outlines have I know not what of life and seeming motion in them, which very much resembles the activity of the flame and fervent.

Dryden.

2. Winding like a serpent; anfractuous.

Nor can the sun

Perfekt a circle, or maintain his way
One inch direct; but where he rose to-day
He comes no more, but with a rozening line
Steals by that point, and so is serpentine.

Donne.

His hand th' adorned firmament display'd,
Those serpentine instant motions made.

Sandys.

How many spacious countries does the Rhine,
In winding banks, and wates serpentine,
Traverse, before he splits in Belgia's plain,
And, lost in fogs, creeps to the German main?

Blackmore.

SERPENTINE. n. f. [diacantium] An herb.

Ainsworth.

SERPENTINE Stone. n. f.

There were three species of this stone known among the ancients, all resembling one another, and celebrated for the same virtues. The one was green, variegated with spots of black, thence called the black ophite; another, called the white ophite, was green also, but variegated with spots of white: the third was called tephria, and was of a grey colour, variegated with small black spots. The ancients tell us, that it was a certain remedy against the poison of the bite of serpents; but it is now justly rejected.

Hill's Materia Medica.

Accept in good part a bottle made of a serpentine stone, which hath the quality to give any wine or water, that shall be infused therein for four and twenty hours, the taste and operation of the spaw-water, and is very medicinal for the cure of the spleen and gravel.

Wotton.

SERPENT'S Tongue. n. f. [opbioglosson.] An herb.

Ainsworth.

SERPENT. n. f. A basket.

Ainsworth.

SERPIGINOUS. adj. [from serpigo, Lat.]

Diseased with a serpigo.

The skin behind her ear downwards became serpiginous, and was covered with white scales.

W'son.

SERPIGO. n. f. [Latin.] A kind of tetter.

For thy own bowels, which do call thee fire,
Do curse the gout, serpigo, and the rheum,
For ending thee no sooner.

Shakespeare.

She had a node, with pains, on her right leg, and a serpigo on her right hand.

W'son.

To SERR. v. a. [serrer, French.] To drive hard together; to crowd into a little space. Not received into use, nor deserving reception.

The frowning and knitting of the brows is a gathering or serring of the spirits, to resist in some measure; and also this knitting will follow upon earnest studying, though it be without dislike.

Heat attenuates and sends forth the spirit of a body, and upon that the more gross parts contract and serr themselves together.

Bacon.

SERRATE. adj. [serratus, Lat.] Form-

SERRATED. ed with jags or indentures like the edge of a saw.

All that have serrate teeth are carnivorous. Ray.
The common heron hath long legs for wading, a long neck answerable thereto to reach prey, a wide throat to pouch it, and long toes, with strong hooked talons: war of which is remarkably serrate on the edge.

Wham's Physico-Theology.

This stick is usually knotted, and always armed: one of them with a curious shark's tooth near an inch long, and indented or serrated on both edges: a scurvy weapon.

Crew.

SERRATION. n. f. [from serra, Latin.]

Formation in the shape of a saw.

SERRATURE. n. f. [from serra, Latin.]

Indenture like teeth of saws.

These are serrated on the edges; but the serratures are deeper and grosser than in any of the rest.

Woodward.

To SERRY. v. a. [serrer, French; serrato, Italian.] To press close; to drive hard together.

For ferry, Bacon uses serr; but neither serr nor ferry are received.

With them rose

A forest huge of spears; and thronging helms
Appear'd, and serr'd shields in thick array,
Of death immeasurable.

Milton's Par. Lost.

Foul diffipation follow'd, and forc'd rout;
Nor serv'd it to relax their serr'd files.

Milton's Par. Lost.

SERVANT. n. f. [servant, French; servus, Latin.]

1. One who attends another, and acts at his command: the correlative of master.

Used of man or woman.

We are one in fortune; both

Fell by our servants, by those men we lov'd most.

Shakespeare.

I had rather be a country servant maid,
Than a great queen with this condition.

Shakespeare's Richard III.

He disdain'd not

Thenceforth the form of servant to assume. Milt.

For master or for servant here to call

Was all alike, where only two were all. Dryden.

2. One in a state of subjection. Unusual.

Being unprepar'd,

Our will became the servant to defect,

Which else should free have wrong'd.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

3. A word of civility used to superiors or equals.

This subjection, due from all men to all men, is something more than the compliment of course, when our betters tell us they are our humble servants, but understand us to be their slaves. Swift.

To SERVANT. v. a. [from the noun,]

To subject. Not in use.

My affairs

Are servanted to others: though I owe

My revenge properly, remission lies

In Volcanic breasts.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

To SERVE. v. a. [servir, French; servio, Latin.]

1. To work for.

Because thou art my brother, shouldst thou therefore serve me for nought? Genesis, xxix. 15.

2. To attend at command.

A goddess among gods ador'd, and serv'd

By angels numberless, thy daily train. Milton.

3. To obey servilely or meanly.

When wealthy, shew thy wisdom not to be

To wealth a servant, but make wealth serve thee.

Denham.

4. To supply with food ceremoniously.

Others, pamper'd in their shameless pride,

Are serv'd in plate, and in their chariots ride.

Dryden.

5. To bring meat as a menial attendant;

with in or up: with in, as meat dress'd

in the kitchen is brought into another room; with up, as the room of repast is commonly higher than the kitchen.

Bid them cover the table, serve in the meat,

and we will come in to dinner.

Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

Soon after our dinner was serv'd in, which was right good viands, both for bread and meat: we had also drink of three sorts, all wholesome and good.

Bacon.

Besieged with the horrid juice of sepia, they danced a little in phantastick postures, retired a while, and then returned, serv'ng up a banquet as at solemn funerals.

Taylor.

Some part he roasts; then serves it up so dress'd,

And bids me welcome to this humble feast:

Mov'd with disdain,

I with avenging flames the palace burn'd. Dryden.

The same merr should be serv'd up again for supper, and breakfast next morning.

Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

6. To be subservient or subordinate to.

Bodies bright and greater should not serve

The less not bright.

Milton.

7. To supply with any thing: as, the curate serv'd two churches.

They that serve the city, shall serve it out of all the tribes of Israel. Ezek. xlviii. 19.

8. To obey in military actions: as, he serv'd the king in three campaigns.

9. To be sufficient to.

If any subject, interest, or fancy has recommended, their reasoning is after their fashion; it serves their turn.

Locke.

10. To be of use to; to assist; to promote.

When a storm of a sad mischance beats upon our spirits, turn it into some advantage, by offering where where it can serve another end, either of religion or prudence. Taylor.

He consider'd every creature
Most opportune might serve his wiles. Milton.

11. To help by good offices.
Shall he thus serve his country, and the muse
The tribute of her just applause refuse? Tate.

12. To comply with; to submit to.
They think herein we serve the time, because thereby we either hold or seek preferment. Hooker.

13. To satisfy; to content.
As the former empty plea served the foolish Jews, this equally serves itself to put them into a fool's paradise, by feeding their hopes, without changing their lives. Sack.

Nothing would serve them but riding. L'Estr.
One half-pint bottle serves them both to dine,
And is at once their viand and wine. Pope.

14. To stand instead of any thing to one.
The dull flat falsehood serves for poetry;
And, in the cunning, truth itself is a lie. Pope.

15. [Je servir de, French.] To serve himself of. To make use of. A mere Gallicism.

A complete brave man must know solidly the main end he is in the world for; and withal how to serve himself of the divine's high contemplations, or the metaphysician's subtle speculations, and of the natural philosopher's minute observations.

Digby on the Soul.
They would serve themselves of this form. Taylor.
I will serve myself of this concession. Chillingw.
It is much more easy for men to serve their own ends of those principles, which they do not put into men, but find there. Tillotson.

If they elevate themselves, 'tis only to fall from a higher place, because they serve themselves of other men's wings, neither understanding their utmost virtue. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

16. To treat; to requite: in an ill sense:
as, he served me ungratefully.

17. [In divinity.] To worship the Supreme Being.
Matters did leave to God, him serve and fear.

18. To SERVE a warrant. To serve an offender, and carry to justice.

19. To SERVE an office. To discharge any onerous and public duty.

TO SERVE. v. n.

1. To be a servant, or slave.
Israel served for a wife, and for a wife he kept sheep. Hebra.

We will give thee this also, for the service which thou shalt serve with me. Girefs, xx. 27.

2. To be in subjection.
Thou hast made me to serve with thy sins;
thou hast wearied me with thine iniquities.

Job, xlii. 24.

3. To attend; to wait.
Martha was cumbered about much servings, and said, Lord, dost thou not care that my sister hath left me to serve alone? Luke, x. 40.

4. To engage in the duties of war under command.

Both more or less have given him the revolt;
And none serve with him but constrained things,
Whose hearts are absent too. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

Many noble gentlemen came out of all parts of Italy, who had before been great commanders, but now served as private gentlemen without pay.

Knolles's History of the Turks.

5. To produce the end desired.
The look betrayed, that, as she used these ornaments not for herself, but to prevail with another, so she feared that all would not serve. Sidney.

6. To be sufficient for a purpose.
Take it, she said; and, when your needs require,
This little brand will serve to light your fire.

Dryden.

7. To suit; to be convenient.

We have the turn of all our griefs;
When time shall serve us to show in articles.

As occasion serves, this noble queen
And pence shall follow with a fresh supply.

Read that; 'tis with the royal signet sign'd,
And given me by the king, when time should serve,
To be perus'd by you. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

8. To conduce; to be of use.

Churches, as every thing else, receive their chief perfection from the end whereunto they serve. Hooker.

Our speech to worldly superiors we frame in such sort as serves best to inform and persuade the minds of them, who otherwise neither could nor would greatly regard our necessities. Hooker.

Who listen, thee, against his purpose serves
To manifest the more thy might. Milton.

First investigate the variety of motions and figures made by the organs which serve for articulation, and the variety of matter to which those articulations are severally applied. Hooker.

Fashion is, for the most part, nothing but the ostentation of riches; and therefore the high price of what serves to that, rather increases than lessens its vent. Locke.

Our victory only served to lead us on to further visionary prospects. Swift.

9. To officiate or minister: as, he served at the public dinner.

SERVICE. n. s. [service, Fr. servitium,
Latin.]

1. Menial office; low business done at the command of a master.

The banish'd Kent, who in disguise
Follow'd his king, and did him service
Improper for a slave. Shakspeare's King Lear.

2. Attendance of a servant.
Both sell by our servants, by those men we lov'd most:

A most unnatural and faithless service. Shakspeare.

3. Place; office of a servant.
I have served prince Florizel; but now I am out of service. Shakspeare.

By oppressing and betraying me,
Thou might'st have sooner got another service.

These that accuse him are a yoke of his discarded men; very rogues, now they be out of service. Shakspeare.

A court, properly a fair, the end of it trade and gain; for none would go to service that thinks he has enough to live well himself. Temple.

4. Any thing done by way of duty to a superior.

That service is not service, so being done,
But being so allow'd. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

This poem was the last piece of service I did for my master king Charles. Dryden.

5. Attendance on any superior.
Madam, I entreat true peace of you,
Which I will purchase with my dutious service.

Riches gotten by service, though it be of the best rife, yet, when gotten by flattery, may be placed amongst the worst. Bacon.

6. Profession of respect uttered or sent.
I am a woman lacking wit
To make a seemly answer to such persons;
Pray do my service to his majesty.

Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

7. Obedience; submission.
Thou, Nature, art my goddess; to thy law
My service is bound. Shakspeare's King Lear.

God requires no man's service upon hard and unreasonable terms. Tillotson's Sermons.

8. Act on the performance of which possession depends.

Although they built castles and made freeholders, yet were there no services reserved to the crown; but the lords drew all the respect and dependency of the common people unto themselves. Macaulay's State of Ireland.

9. Actual duty; office.

The order of human society cannot be preserved, nor the services requisite to the support of it be supplied, without a system of stations, and a long subordination of offices. Rogers.

10. Employment; business.

If nations of power and trust were constantly made the reward of virtue, men of great abilities would endeavour to excel in the duties of a religious life, in order to qualify themselves for public service. Swift.

11. Military duty.

When he cometh to experience of service abroad, or is put to a piece of policy, he maketh a worthy soldier. Spenser.

At the parliament at Oxford, his youth, and want of experience in sea service, had somewhat been shrewdly touch'd, even before the strokes of popular liberty were yet set on. Hutton's Buck.

12. A military achievement.

Such fellows will learn you by rote where service was done, at such and such a breach.

Shakspeare's Henry V.

13. Purpose; use.

All the vessels of the king's house are not for uses of honour; some be common stuff, and for mean services, yet profitable. Spelman.

14. Useful office; advantage conferred.

The stork's ples, when taken in a net, was, the service she did in picking up venomous creatures.

L'Estrange.

The clergy prevent themselves from doing much service to religion, by allowing so much to converse with each other, and caring so little to mingle with the laity. Swift.

Gentle streams visit populous towns in their course, and are at once of ornament and service to them. Pope.

That service may really be done, the medicine must be given in larger quantities. Mead.

15. Favour.

To thee a woman's services are due,
My fool usurps my body. Shakspeare's King Lear.

16. Public office of devotion.

According to this form of theirs, it must stand for a rule, no sermon, no service. Hooker.

If that very service of God in the Jewish synagogues, which our Lord did approve and sanctify with his own presence, had so large portions of the law and prophets, together with the many prayers and psalms read day by day, as equal in a manner the length of ours, and yet in that respect was never thought to deserve blame; is it now an ob- sistence, that the like measure of time is bestowed in the like manner? Hooker.

I know no necessity why private and single abilities should quite justify out and deprive the church of the joint abilities and concurrent gifts of many learned and godly men, such as the un- posers of the service book were. King Charles.

The congregation was discomposed, and divine service broken off. Hutton.

17. Course; order of dishes.

Cleopatra made Anthony a supper sumptuous and royal; howbeit there was no extraordinary ser- vice seen on the board. Hakewill.

18. A tree and fruit. [servus, Latin.]

The flower consists of several leaves, which are placed orbicularly, and expand in form of a rose, whose flower-cup afterwards becomes a fruit shaped like a pear or medlar; to which must be added, perhaps, leaves like that of the ash. Milford.

October is drawn in a garment of yellow and carnation; in his left hand a basket of services, mellars, and other fruits that ripen late. Pearson.

SERVICEABLE. adj. [servissable, old Fr.
from service.]

1. Active; diligent; officious.

He was sent to the king's court, with letters from that officer, containing his own serviceable diligence.

diligent in discovering so great a personage; adding withal more than was true of his conjectures. Sidney.

I know thee well, a servicable villain;
As dutious to the vices of thy mistress
As baseness could desire. Shakspeare. King Lear.

2. Useful; beneficial.

Religion hath force to qualify all sorts of men, and to make them, in publick affairs, the more servicable, governors the apter to rule with confidence; inferiors, for confidence sake, the willinger to obey. Hooker.

So your father charg'd me at our parting,
Be servicable to my son. Shakspeare.

His own inclinations were to confine himself to his own business, and be servicable to religion and learning. Atterbury.

A book to justify the revolution archbishop Tillotson recommended to the king, as the most servicable treatise that could have been published then. Swift.

SERVICABLENESS. n. f. [from servicable.]

1. Officiousness; activity.

He might continually be in her presence, shewing more humble servicable and joy to content her than ever before. Sidney.

2. Usefulness; beneficialness.

All action being for some end, its aptness to be commanded or forbidden must be founded upon its servicable or disserviceableness to some end. Norris.

SERVILE. adj. [servil, French; servilis, Latin.]

1. Slavish; dependant; mean.

Fight and die, is death destroying death;
Where fearing dying, pays death servile breath. Shakspeare.

From imposition of strict laws to free
Acceptance of large grace, from servile fear
To trial. Milton.

Even fortune rules no more a servile land,
Where civil tyrants still by turns command. Pope.

2. Fawning; cringing.

The most servile flattery is lodged the most easily in the greatest capacity; for their ordinary conceit draweth a yielding to their greatness, and then have they not wit to discern the right degrees of duty. Sidney.

She must bend the servile knee,
And tawning take the splendid robber's boon. Thomson.

SERVILELY. adv. [from servile.] Meanly; slavishly.

Each changing news they chang'd affections bring,
And servilely from fate expect a king. Dryden. Ann.

He affects a singularity in his actions and thoughts, rather than servilely to copy from the worst. Swift.

SERVILENESS. } n. f. [from servile.]
SERVILITY.

1. Subjection; involuntary obedience.

What, besides this unhappy servility to custom, can possibly reconcile men, that own christianity, to a practice widely distant from it? G. Government of the Tongue.

2. Meanness; dependance; baseness.

3. Submission from fear.

The angels and demons, those by their subservience, and these by the servility of their obedience, manifestly declare Christ and his apostles to be vested with an authority derived from their Lord. Wright.

4. Slavery; the condition of a slave.

To be a queen in bondage, is more vile
Than to be a slave in base servility;
For princes should be free. Shakspeare. Henry VI.

SERVING-MAN. n. f. [serve and man.] Menial servant.

For niece did more favours to the duke's serving-man Than ever the husband did me. Shakspeare. Twelfth Night.

Just in the nick; the cook knock'd thrice,
And all the waiters in a trice

His summons did obey;
Each serving-man, with dish in hand,
March'd boldly up, like our train'd band,

Presented, and away, Swickling.

With Dennis you did ne'er combine,
Not you, to steal your master's wine;

Except a bottle, now and then,
To welcome brother serving-man. Swift.

SERVITOR. n. f. [servitor, French.]

1. Servant; attendant. A word obsolete.

This workman, whose servitor nature is, being only one, the heathens imagining to be more, gave him in the sky the name of Jupiter; in the air, of Juno; in the water, of Neptune; in the earth, of Vesta and Ceres. Hooker.

Thus are poor servitors,
When others sleep upon their quiet beds,
Constrain'd to watch in darkness, rain, and cold. Shakspeare.

Fearful commenting
Is laden servitor to dull delay;
Delay leads impotent and snail-paced beggary. Shakspeare.

2. One who acts under another; a follower.

Our Norman conqueror gave away to his servitors the lands and possessions of such as did oppose his invasion. Davies.

3. One who professes duty and obedience.

My noble queen, let former grudges pass,
And henceforth I am thy true servitor. Shakspeare's Henry VI.

4. One of the lowest order in the universality.

His learning is much of a size with his birth and education; no more of either than what a poor hungry servitor can be expected to bring with him from his college. Swift.

SERVITUDE. n. f. [servitude, Fr. servitus, Lat.]

1. Slavery; state of a slave; dependance.

Antistrophe speaketh of men, whom nature hath flamed for the state of servitude, saying, They have reason so far forth as to conceive when others direct them. Hooker.

You would have sold your king to slaughter,
His princes and his peers to servitude,
His subjects to oppression and contempt. Shakspeare's Henry V.

Unjustly the servant is with the name
Of servitude, to those whom God ordains,
Or nature: God and nature bid the sage,
When he who rules is worthiest. Milton.

Though it is necessary that some persons in the world should be in love with a splendid servitude, yet certainly they must be much beholdling to their own fancy, that they can be pleased at it; for he that rises up early, and goes to bed late, only to receive addresses, is really as much abridged in his freedom, as he that waits to present once. Soutb.

2. Servants collectively. Not in use.

After him a cumbersome train
Of herds and flocks, and numerous servitude. Milton.

SERUM. n. f. [Latin.]

1. The thin and watery part that separates from the rest in any liquor, as in milk the whey from the cream.

2. The part of the blood which in coagulation separates from the grume.

Blood is the most universal juice in an animal body: the red part of it differs from the serum, the serum from the lymph, the lymph from the nervous juice, and that from the several other humours separated in the glands. Arbuthnot.

SESQUIALTER. } adj. [sesquialtere, Fr.]

SESQUIALTERAL. } sesquialter, Latin.]

In geometry, is a ratio where one quantity or number contains another once and half as much more, as 6 and 9.

In all the revolutions of the planets about the sun, and of the secondary planets about the primary ones, the periodical times are in a sesquialter proportion to the mean distance. Cbeys.

As the six primary planets revolve about the sun, so the secondary ones are moved about them, in the same sesquialteral proportion of their periodical motions to their orbs. Benley.

SESQUIPEDAL. } adj. [sesquipedalis, Lat.]

SESQUIPEDALIAN. } Containing

a foot and a half.

As for my own part, I am but a sesquipedal, having only six foot and a half of stature. Addison's Guardian.

Hast thou ever measured the gigantick Ethiopian, whose stature is above eight cubits high, or the sesquipedalian pigmy? Abbot and Pope.

SESQUIPLICATE. adj. [In mathematics.] Is the proportion one quantity or number has to another, in the ratio of one half.

The periodical times of the planets are in sesquuplicate proportion, and not a duplicate proportion of the distances from the center or the radii; and consequently the planets cannot be carried about by an harmonically circulating fluid. Cleyn's Philosophical Principles.

SESQUITERTIAN. [In mathematics.]

Having such a ratio, as that one quantity or number contains another once and one third part more, as between 6 and 8. Dia.

SESS. n. f. [for sessis, cels, or cente.] Rate; cels charged; tax.

His army was so ill paid and governed, as the English suffered more damage by the loss of his soldiers, than they gained profit or security by abating the pride of their enemies. Davies's History of Ireland.

SESSON. n. f. [sessio, Fr. sessio, Lat.]

1. The act of sitting.

He hath as man, not as God only, a supreme dominion over quick and dead; for so much his ascension into heaven, and his session at the right hand of God, do import. Hooker.

Many, though they concede a table-gesture, will hardly allow this usual way of session. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. A stated assembly of magistrates or senators.

They are ready to appear
Where you shall hold your session. Shakspeare. Henry K. Lear.

Summon a session, that we may arraign
Our most d. royal lady. Shakspeare.

The old man, mindful still of moans,
Weeping, thus bespake the session. Chapman's Odyssey.

Of their session ended they bid cry
The great result. Milton.

Call'd to council all the Achaian states,
Nor herald sworn the session to proclaim. Pope's Odyssey.

3. The space for which an assembly sits, without intermission or recess.

It was contrary to the course of parliament, that any bill that had been rejected should be again preferred the same session. Clarendon.

The second Nicene council affords us plentiful assistance in the first session, wherein the pope's vicar declares that Meletius was ordained by Arian bishops, and yet his ordination was never questioned. Stillingfleet.

Many decrees are enacted, which at the next session are repealed. Norris.

4. A meeting of justices: as, the sessions of the peace.

Ezek. xxii.

God set them in the firmament, to give light upon the earth.
Gen. i. 17.

She sets the bar that causes all my pain;
One gift refus'd, makes all their bounty vain.
Dryden.

The lives of the revelers may be justly enough set over against the revelation, to find whether they agree.
Atterbury.

2. To put into any condition, state, or posture.

They thought the very disturbance of things established an hire sufficient to set them on work.
Maken.

That man that sits within a monarch's heart;
Would he about the countenance of the king,
Alack, what mischief might he set abroad!
Shakespeare.

Our princely general
Will give you audience; and wherein
It shall appear that your demands are just,
You shall enjoy them; every thing set off
That might so much as think you enemies.
Shakespeare.

This present enterprize set off his head,
I do not think a braver gentleman
Is now alive.
Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Ye caused every man his servant, whom he had set at liberty, to return.
Jer. xxxiv. 16.

Every Sabbath ye shall set it in order.
Lev. xxiv. 8.

I am come to set a man at variance against his father.
Matthew.

Thou shalt pour out into all those vessels, and set aside that which is full.
2 Kings, iv. 4.

The beauty of his ornament he set in majesty, but they made images; therefore have I set it far from them.
Ezek.

The gates of thy land shall be set wide open.
Neb. iii. 13.

The fathers have eaten a sour grape, and the children's teeth are set on edge.
Jer. xxxi. 20.

The shipping might be set on work by fishing, by transportations from port to port.
Bacon.

This wheel, set on going, did pour a war upon the Venetians with such a tempest, as Padua and Treviso were taken from them.
Bacon.

That this may be done with the more advantages, some hours must be set apart for this examination.
Dunne.

Finding the river fordable at the foot of the bridge, he set over his horse.
Hayward.

By his aid aspiring
To set himself in glory above his peers.
Milton.

Equal success had set these champions high,
And both resolv'd to conquer or to die.
Waller.

Nothing renders a man so inconsiderable; for it sets him above the meaner sort of company, and makes him intolerable to the better.
Government of the Tongue.

Some are reclaimed by punishment, and some are set right by good-nature.
L'Estrange.

The fire was form'd, she set the kettle on.
Dryden.

Leda's protest came
To ruin Troy, and set the world on flame.
Dryden.

Set calf betimes to school, and let him be instructed there in rules of husbandry.
Dryden.

O'er-labour'd with so long a court,
'Tis time to set at ease the smoking horse.
Dryden.

The punishment shall set my soul at ease,
And murthering manes of my friend appeal.
Dryden.

Love call'd in haste
The son of Mus, with severe decree,
To kill the keeper, and to set her free.
Dryden.

If such a tradition were at any time end-avour'd to be set on foot, it is not easy to imagine how it should at first gain entertainment.
Tillotson.

When the father looks four on the child, every body else should put on the same coldness, till forgiveness is asked, and a reformation of his fault has set him right again, and restored him to his former credit.
Locke on Education.

His practice must by no means cross his precepts, unless he intend to set him wrong.
Locke on Education.

If the fear of absolute and irresistible power set it on upon the mind, the idea is likely to sink the deeper.
Locke.

When he has once chosen it, it raises desire that proportionably gives him uneasiness, which determines his will, and sets him at work in pursuit of his choice on all occasions.
Locke.

This river,
When nature's self lay ready to expire,
Quench'd the dire flame that set the world on fire.
Addison.

A couple of lovers agreed, at parting, to sit aside one half hour in the day to think of each other.
Addison.

Your fortune's place you far above the necessity of learning, but nothing can set you above the ornament of it.
Felton.

Their first movement and impressed motions demand the impulse of an almighty hand to set them a-going.
Cheyne.

That the wheels were but small, may be proved from a custom they have of taking them off, and setting them on.
Pope.

Be frequent in setting such causes at work,
whose effects you desire to know.
Watts.

3. To make motionless; to fix immoveably.

Struck with the sight, inanimate she seems,
Set are her eyes, and motionless her limbs.
Garth.

4. To fix; to state by some rule.

Hereon the prompter calls to stat railing in the bitterest terms; which the gentleman, with a set gesture and countenance, still soberly related; until the ordinary, driven at last into a mad rage, was lain to give over.
Carew.

The town of Bern has handsome fountains planted, at set distances, from one end of the street to the other.
Addison.

5. To regulate; to adjust.

In court they determine the king's good by his desires, which is a kind of setting the sun by the dial.
Sackville.

God bears a different respect to places set apart and consecrated to his worship, to what he bears to places designed to common uses.
Steele.

Our palates grow into a liking of the seasoning and cookery which by custom they are set to.
Locke.

He rules the church's blest dominions,
And sets men's faith by his opinions.
Prior.

Against experience he believes,
He argues against demonstration;
Pleads when his reason he deceives,
And sets his judgment by his passions.
Prior.

6. To fit to music; to adapt with notes.

Set thy own songs, and sing them to thy lute.
Dryden.

Grief he tames that fetters it in verse;
But when I have done so,
Some man, his art or voice to show,
Doth set and sing my pain;
And, by setting many's more again
Grief, which verily did restrain.
Dunne.

I had one day set the hundredth psalm, and was singing the first line in order to put the congregation into the tune.
Spenser.

7. To plant; not sow.

Whatever fruit useth to be set upon a root or a slip, if it be sown, will degenerate.
Bacon's Natural History.

I prostrate fell,
To shrubs and plants my vile devotion paid,
And set the bearded look to which I pray'd.
Prior.

8. To intersperse or variegate with any thing.

As with stars, their bodies all,
And wings, were set with eyes.
Milton.

High on their heads, with jewels richly set,
Each lady wore a radiant coronet.
Dryden.

The holy is smooth on that end, and on this it is set with ridges round the point.
Woodward.

9. To reduce from a fractured or dislocated state.

Can honour set to a leg? no: or an arm? no:
honour hath no skill in surgery then? no.
Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Considering what an orderly life I had led, I only commended that my arm and leg should be set, and my body anointed with oil.
Herbert.

The fracture was of both the fossils of the left leg: he had been in great pain from the time of the setting.
Hysman.

Credit is gained by course of time, and seldom recovers a shame; but, if broken, is never well set again.
Temple.

10. To fix the affection; to determine the thoughts.

Set your affection on things above, not on things on the earth.

They should set their hope in God, and not forget his works.
Psalms lxxviii. 7.

Because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, the heart of men is fully set is them to do evil.
Ecclesiastes.

Some I found wond'rous harsh,
Contemptuous, proud, set on revenge and spite.
Milton.

Set not thy heart

Thus overfond on that which is not thine.
Milton.

When we are well, our hearts are set,
Which way we care not, to be rich or great.
Disband.

Our hearts are so much set upon the value of the benefits received, that we never think of the flower.
L'Estrange.

These bubbles of the shallowest, emptiest world
Which children vent for toys, and women raise
For any trifle their fond hearts are set on.
Dryden and I.

Should we set our hearts only upon these things and be able to taste no pleasure but what is sensual, we must be extremely miserable when we come into the other world, because we should meet with nothing to entertain ourselves.
Quintus.

No sooner is one action dispatched, which we are set upon, but another uneasiness is ready to set us on work.
Locke.

Minds, altogether set on trade and profit, often contract a certain narrowness of temper.
Addison.

Men take an ill-named pleasure in disappointing us in what our hearts are most set upon.
Addison's Spectator.

An Englishman, who has any degree of reflection, cannot be better awakened to a sense of religion in general, than by observing how the mind of all mankind are set upon this important point and how every nation is attentive to the great ba-nality of their beings.
Addison.

I am much concerned when I see young gentlemen of so true a wholly set upon pleasures, that they neglect all improvements in wisdom and knowledge.
Addison.

11. To predetermine; to settle.

We may still doubt whether the Lord, in such indifferent ceremonies as these whereof we dispute, do frame his people of set purpose unto an utter dissimilitude with Egyptians, or with an other nation.
Hoskins.

He remembers only the name of Conon, and forgets the other, on set purpose, to show his country (Swain) was no great scholar. Dryden.

12. To establish; to appoint; to fix.

Of all helps for our performance of this service, the greatest is that very set and standing order itself, which, framed with common advice, hath for matter and form prescribed whatsoever is hereinafter publicly done. Hooker.

It pleased the king to send me, and I set him a time. N. I. ii.

He setteth on end to darkness, and Year lieth out all perfection. Job, xxviii. 3.

In studies, whatsoever a man commandeth upon himself, let him set hours for it, but whatsoever is agreeable to his nature, let him take no care for any set times: for his thoughts will fly to it of themselves, to as the spaces or other business or studies will suffice. Bacon.

For using set and prescribed forms, there is no doubt but that wholesome words, being known, are aptest to excite judicious and fervent affection. King Charles.

The seed, when is not set, shall baffle my head. Milton.

Though set form of prayer be an abomination, Set forms of petitions find great approbation. Denham.

Set places and set hours are but parts of that worship we owe. South.

That law cannot keep men from taking more note than you set, the want of money being that alone, which regulates its price, will appear, if we consider how hard it is to set a price upon unnecessary commodities; but how impossible it is to set a rate upon victuals in a time of famine. Locke.

Set him such a task, to be done in such a time. Locke.

Take set times of meditating on what is future. Akerbury.

Should a man go about, with never to set study and design, to describe such a natural form of the year as that which is at present established, he could scarcely ever do it in so few words that were sufficient. Woodward.

3. To appoint to an office; to assign to a post.

Am I a sea, or a whale, that thou settest a watch over me? Job, vii. 12.

As in the subordinations of government the king is offended by any insults to an inferior magistrate, so the sovereign ruler of the universe is affronted by a breach of allegiance to those whom he has set over us. Addison.

4. To exhibit; to display: with before.

Through the variety of my readings, I set before me many examples both of ancient and later times. Bacon.

Reject not then what offer'd means: who knows But God hath set before us to return thee Home to thy country and his sacred house? Milton.

Long has my soul desir'd this time and place. To set before your sight your glorious race. Dryden.

A space as well from his broad forehead's frow, That set the unhappy Phaeton to view. The flaming chariot and the floods it shew'd, And the whole fable in the mantle glow'd. Addison.

When his fortune sets before him all The pomp and pleasures that his soul can wish, His rigid virtue will accept of none. Addison's C. 10.

He supplies his art appearing in the present scene of action, by setting his character before us, and continually turning our patience, prudence, and valour upon our observations. Rowe.

72. This is one of the words that can hardly be explained otherwise than by various and multiplied exemplification.
It is scarcely to be referred to any radical or primitive notion; it very frequently includes the idea of a change made in the state of the subject, with some degree of continuance in the state superinduced.

I laugh to see your ladyship so fond,
To think that you have caught but Talbot's shadow
Whereon to practise your severity.

There is a difference between an ecclesiastical censure and severity: for under a censure we only include excommunication, suspension, and an interdict;
but under an ecclesiastical severity every other punishment of the church is intended; but, according to some, a censure and a severity is the same.

2. Hardness; power of disressing.

Though nature hath given insects sagacity to avoid the winter cold, yet its severity finds them out.

corresponding to the body by which the light is intercepted; the shadow.

Envy will merit, as its shade, pursue.

10. The soul separated from the body; so called, as supposed by the ancients to be perceptible to the sight, not to the touch.

A spirit, a ghost; manes.

To Trachin, swift as thought, the sitting shade
Thro' air his momentary journey made.

Ne'er to these chambers, where the mighty rest,
Since their foundation came a nobler guest;

Not e'er was to the bow'rs of bliss convey'd
A spirit spirit or more welcome shade.

TO SHADE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To overspread with opacity.

The full blaze of thy beams, and through a cloud
Thy skirts appear.

2. To cover from the light or heat; to overspread.

A seraph six wings wore to shade
His lineaments divine.

And, after these, came arm'd with spear and shield
An host so great as cover'd all the field;

And all their foreheads, like the knights before,
With laurels ever green were shaded o'er.

I went to clop the lyvan scenes,
And shade our altars with their leafy greens.

Sing, while beside the shaded tomb I mourn,
And with fresh bays her rural shrine adorn.

Dutch.]

1. The representation of a body by which the light is intercepted.

Poor Tom! proud of heart, to ride over four-inch'd bridges, to course his own shadow for a traitor.

Life 's but a walking shadow, a poor player,
That struts and frets his hour upon the stage,
And then is heard no more.

Such a nature,
Tickled with good success, disdains the shadow
Which he treads on at noon.

The body, though it moves, yet not changing perceivable distance with some other bodies, the thing seems to stand still, as in the hands of clocks, and shadows of sun-dials.

2. Opacity; darkness; shade.
By the revolution of the skirts
Night's sable shadows from the ocean rise.

His countrymen probably lived within the shake of the earthquake, and shadow of the eclipse.

3. Shelter made by any thing that intercepts the light, heat, or influence of the air.

In secret shadow from the sunny ray,
On a sweet bed of lilies softly laid.

Here, father, take the shadow of this tree
For your good host.

4. Obscure place.
To the fester shadows I retire,
To pay my penance till my years expire.

5. Dark part of a picture.
A shadow is a diminution of the first and second light. The first light is that which proceeds immediately from a lightened body, as the beams of the sun. The second is an accidental light, spreading itself into the air, or medium, proceeding from the other. Shadows are threefold:
the first is a single shadow, and the least of all;
and is proper to the plain surface, where it is not wholly possid of the light. The second is the double shadow, and it is used when the surface begins once to forsake your eye, as in columns. The third shadow is made by crossing over your double shadow again, which darkeneth by a third part.
It is used for the inmost shadow, and farthest from the light, as in gulfs, wells, and caves.

After great lights there must be great shadows.

6. Any thing perceptible only to the sight;
a ghost; a spirit, or shade.

Hence, terrible shadow!
Unreal mock'ry, hence!

grass ; gramen sylvaticum, Latin.] A kind of grass.

SHA'DOWY. adj. [from shadow.]

1. Full of shade ; gloomy.

This shadowy desert, unfrequented wood,
I better brook than flourishing peopled towns.

Shakespeare.

With shadowy verdure flourish'd high,

A sudden youth the groves enjoy.

Fenton.

2. Not brightly luminous.

More pleasant light

Milton

Shadowy sets off the face of things.

3. Faintly representative ; typical.

When they see

Law can discover sin, but not remove,
Save by those shadowy expiations weak,
The blood of bulls and goats ; they may conclude
Some blood more precious must be paid for man.

Milton.

4. Unsubstantial ; unreal.

Milton has brought into his poems two sorts of a shadowy and fictitious nature, in the persons of sin and death ; by which he hath interwoven in his fable a very beautiful allegory.

Addison.

5. Dark ; opaque.

By command, ere yet dim night
Her shadowy cloud withdraws, I am to haste Homeward.

Dryden.

A lion's hide he wears ;

About his shoulders hangs the shaggy skin,
The teeth and gaping jaws severely grin.

Dryden.

From the frosty north

The early valiant Swede draws forth his wings,
In battalious array, while Volga's stream
Sends opposite, in shaggy armour clad,
Her borderers, on mutual slaughter bent.

Philips.

2. Rough ; rugged.

They pluck'd the seated hills with all their load,
Rock, waters, woods ; and by the shaggy tops
Uplifting, bore them in their hands.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

There, where very desolation dwells,

By grots and caverns shaggy'd with horrid shades,
She may pass on with unblench'd majesty,
Be it not done in pride.

Milton.

Through Eden went a river large,
Nor chang'd his course, but through the shaggy hill
Pass'd underneath ingulph'd.

Milton.

How would the old king smile

To see you weigh the paws when tipt with gold,
And throw the shaggy spoils about your shoulders.

Addison.

Ye rugged rocks ! which holy knees have worn ;
Ye grots and caverns shaggy'd with horrid thorn !

Pope.

casteth her untimely figs when she is shaken of a mighty wind.

Rev. vi.

He shook the sacred honours of his head ;
With terror trembled heav'n's subsiding hill,
And from his shaken curls ambrosial dews distill.

Dryden.

She first her husband on the poop espies,
Shaking his hand at distance on the main ;
She wook the sign, and shook her hand again.

Dryden.

I should not see the sandy hour-glass run,
But I should think of shallow and of flats;
And see my wealthy Andrew dock'd in sand,
Veiling her high top lower than her ribs,
To kiss her burial. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

A swift stream is not heard in the channel, but upon shallows of gravel. Bacon's Natural History.
Having but newly left the grammatical flats and shallows, where they stuck unreasonably, to learn a few words with lamentable construction, and now on the sudden transported, to be toss'd with them in ballad wits in fathomless and unquenchable steps of controversy, they do grow into hatred of learning. Milton.

You that so oft have sounded
And fathom'd all his thoughts, that know the deeps
And shallows of his heart, should need no instruments

To advance your ends. Denham.
He sounds and fathoms him, to find
The shallows of his soul. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

The wary Dutch
Behind their treacherous shallows now withdraw,
And there lay snare to catch the British host. Dryden.

Three more fierce Eurus in his angry mood
Dash'd on the shallows of the moving land,
And in mid ocean left them moor'd a-land.

Dryden's Æneid.
In arms of the sea, and among islands, there is no great depth, and some places are plain shallows.

Burton.
Their spawn being lighter than the water, there it would not sink to the bottom, but be buoyed by it, and carried away to the shallows.

Ray on the Creation.
With the use of diligence, and prudent conduct,
he may decline both rocks and shallows. Norris.

The sea could not be much narrower than it is, without a great loss to the world; and must we now have an ocean of mere flats and shallows, to the utter ruin of navigation? Bentley.

SHALLOWBRAINED. adj. [shallow and brain.] Foolish; futile; trifling; empty.

And shame his ugly face did hide from living eye. Spenser.

Peace, peace, for shame, if not for charity.

—Urged neither charity nor shame to me:
Uncharitably with me have you dealt,
And shamefully my hopes by you are butcher'd:
My charity is outrage, life my shame;
And in my shame still lives my sorrow's rage. Shakespeare's Richard III.

Hide, for shame,
Romans, your grandfires images,
That blush at their degenerate progeny. Dryden.

In the schools men are allowed, without shame, to deny the agreement of ideas; or, out of the schools, from thence have learned, without shame, to deny the connection of ideas. Locke.

2. The cause or reason of shame; difgrace; ignominy.

The more shame for him that he sends it me;
For I have heard him say, a thousand times,
His Julia gave it him, at his departure. Shakespeare.
God deliver the world from such guides, who are the shame of religion. South.

This jest was first of th' other house's making,

5. SHARE. v. a. [sceapn, scynan, Sax.]

1. To divide; to part among many.

Good fellow all,
The latest of my wealth I'll share amongst you.

Any man may take trial of his fortune, provided
He a knowledge the lord's right, by sharing it.

he then to you his ears unites,
A burden where he shares his heart.

In the active times the share of the poet
Hod was equally shared among all the share of that character had any share in it.
Enough the weight of a tithing, the two heav' for one to bear, it grows but a trifling gimensions when it is shared on many.

Suppose I share my fortune equally between children and a stranger, will that unite them?

2. To partake with others; to seize or possess jointly with another.

The captain, half of whose soldiers are dead, and the other part never mustered or seen, comes shouty to demand payment of his whole account, where, by good means of some great ones, and pious prayers with the officers of other some, he receiveth his debt. Spenser on Ireland.

In vain does valour bleed,
While avarice and rapine share the land. Milton.
Go, silently enjoy your part of grief,
And share the sad inheritance with me. Dryden.

beneficial bargains, and exclude us wholly from them.
Swift.

SHARE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Part; allotment; dividend obtained.

If every just man, that now pines with want,
Had but a moderate and befitting share
Of that which lewdly-pamper'd luxury
Now heaps upon some with vast excess. Milton

The subdued territory was divided into greater and smaller shares, besides that reserved to the prince. Temple

I'll give you arms; burn, ravish, and destroy;
For my own share one beauty I design;
Engage your honours that she shall be mine. Dryd.

While fortune favours me,
I made some figure, nor was my name
Obscure, nor I without my share of time.

The youth has equal share
In Macbeth's wicked and divine inheritance.
Addison's Cato.

In part a true genius is but rare,
In the share of the critic's share. Pope.

He who does not perform that put assigned him, is a very mischievous member of the publick, because he is not his share of the thing, and yet he has his share of the benefit, and is not his share of the burden. Swift.

2. To go share; to partake.

They were contented, as every one to go share and share with the other. L'Estrange.

By being share in every one's share, I have the full share of all. Johnson. God, they would not be contented, but play, to be one another in the little enjoyments of this transitory life. Law.

3. A part contributed.

of the share, nor the share of the share. Dryden
The share of the share will be compared, and share of the share shall vex the fearful ground.
Dryden.

Incumbent o'er the shining share
The master leans, removes the obtrusive clay.

For clay the couler is long and bending, and the share is round. Milton.

SHAR-BONE. n. f. [share and bone.]

The os pubis; the bone that divides the trunk from the limbs.

The cartilage joining together the two os pu-bis, or sharebones, Bartholine faith, is twice thicker and laxer in women than men. Derham.

SHARER. n. f. [from share.]

1. One who divides or apportions to others; a divider.

2. A partaker; one who participates any thing with others.

Molt it seem'd the French king to import,
As share in his daughter's injury. Dan. Civil War.

panions in good fortune, will hardly agree to be share in bad. L'Estrange.

An overgrown estate falling into the hands of one that has many children, it is broken into so many portions as render the share rich enough. Addy
You must have known it.

—Indeed I did, then favour'd by the king,
And by that means a share in the secret. R. we.

It, by taking on himself human nature at last, he hath a compassionate and tender sense of the infirmities of mankind in general, he must needs,

In a peculiar manner, feel and commiserate the infirmities of the poor, in which he himself was fo-reminent a share. Afterbury.

I suffer many things as an author militant, whereof in your days of probation you have been a share. Pope to Swift.

David's messengers are sent back to him, like to many sharks and rannagates, only for endeavouring to compiment an ill nature out of itself, and seeking that by prison which they might have commanded by, the sword. South.

3. Trick, fraud; petty rapine. A low word.

Watches who live upon the shark, and other men's fins, the common poisoners of youth, equally desperate in their fortunes and their means, and getting their very bread by the damnation of souls. South.

To SHARK. v. a. To pick up hastily or slyly.

Young Fontinbras,
Of unimprov'd mettle, hot and full,
Hath in the skirts of Norway, here and there,

nights, for the town is sharp-set on new plays.

SHARP-SIGHTED. adj. [sharp and sight.]

Having quick sight.

If she were the body's quality,
Then would she be with it sick, maim'd, and blind;
But we perceive, where these privations be,
An healthy, perfect, and sharp-sighted mind.

I am not so sharp-sighted as those who have discerned this rebellion contriving from the death of Q. Elizabeth.

Your majesty's clear and sharp-sighted judgment has as good a title to give law in matters of this nature, as in any other.

Nothing so fierce but love will soften, nothing so sharp-sighted in other matters but it throws a mist before the eyes on't.

SHARP-VISAGED. adj. [sharp and visage.]

Having a sharp countenance.

The Welsh that inhabit the mountains are commonly sharp-visaged.

TO SHATTER. v. a. [schetteren, Dutch.]

1. To break at once into many pieces; to break so as to scatter the parts.

'tis a sigh so piteous and profound,
That it did seem to shatter all his bulk,
And rend his being.

Ye myrtles brown, with ivy never fear,
I come to pluck your berries harsh and crude,
And with forc'd fingers rude
Shatter your leaves before the mellowing year.

They escape dissolution, because they can't be ever met with an agent minute and swiftly enough moved to shatter or dislocate the combination.

A monarchy was shatter'd to pieces, and divided amongst revolted subjects, into a multitude of little governments.

Back from the stroke above, the iron bulding Stands as a shatter'd trunk.

2. To dissipate; to make incapable of close and continued attention.

A man of a loose, volatile, and shatter'd humour, thinks only by fits and starts.

TO SHATTER. v. n. To be broken, or to fall, by any force applied, into frag-ments.

Of bodies, some are fragile, and some are tough and not fragile; and, in the breaking, some fragile bodies break but where the force is; some shatter and fly in many places.

SHATTER. n. s. [from the verb.] One part of many into which any thing is broken at once.

Stick the candle so loose, that it will fall upon the glass of the telescope, and break it into shatters.

1. To pare off with a razor.

He that is to be cleaned shall shave off all his hair.

Zelim was the first of the Ottomans that did shave his beard: a bathaw asked, Why he altered the custom of his predecessors? He answered, Because you bathaws may not lead me by the beard, as you did them.

Doth thou not know this shaven pate? Truly it is a great man's head.

I cauted the hair of his head to be shaved off.

2. To pare close to the surface.

Sweet bird!
Thee, chauntress, oft the woods among
I woo, to hear thy evening song:
And, musing there, I walk unseen
On the dry smooth shaven green.

The waving cythe
Shaves all the surface of the waving green.

3. To skim by passing near, or slightly touching.

He shaves with level wing the deep; then hovers
Up to the fiery concave tow'ring high.

friers and knavish shavings to be gnad.

SHAVEN. n. s. [from shave.]

1. A man that practises the art of shaving.

2. A man closely attentive to his own in-terest.

My lord
Was now dispos'd to crack a jest,
And bid friend Lewis go in quest;
This Lewis is a cunning shaver.

3. A robber; a plunderer.

They fell all into the hands of the cruel mountain people, living for the most part by theft, and the shavers the Turks were murtherers all their heads.

SHAVING. n. s. [from shave.] Any thin

slice pared off from any body.

Take lignum above to shaving, slice them in sack, changed twice, till the bitterness be drawn forth; then take the shavings forth, and dry them in the shade, and beat them to powder.

By electric bodies I do not conceive only such as take up shavings, straws, and light bodies, but such as attract all bodies palpable whatsoever.

The shavings are good for the fining of wine.

SHAW. n. s. [scua, Saxon; schaw,

Dutch; šugga, Islandick.] A thicket;

SHE. pronoun. In oblique case, her. [she,

Gotick; reo, Saxon; she, old English.]

1. The female pronoun demonstrative; the woman; the woman before men- tioned.

She, of whom the ancients seem'd to prophesy,
When they call'd virtues by the name of she;
See, in whom virtue was to man refin'd,
That for all sorts to put a mind
She took the work of she.

This once diseol'd,
The ladies did change favours, and then we Following the sign, wou'd but the sign of she.

What, at any time, have you heard she say? She.
The most upright of moral men was he;
The most sincere and holy woman she.

2. It is sometimes used for a woman abso- lutely, with some degree of contempt.

The she of Italy shall not betray Mine interest, and his honour.

Lady, you are the cruellest she alive,
If you will lead these graces to the grave,
And leave the world no copy.

I was wont
To load my she with knacks; I would have ran-ack'd

The prelat's silken treasury, and have pour'd it
To her acceptance.

3. The female; not the male.

I would outface the sternest eyes that look,
Pluck the young sucking cubs from the she bear,
To win thee, lady.

The nightingale, if she would sing by day,
When every goose is cackling, would be thought
No better a musician than the wren.

He has a mane, and have great manes; the his are smooth, like cats. Bacon.
Spaid it in Judah's chronicles confest,
That David's son, by impious passion mov'd,
Smote a she-slave, and murder'd what he lov'd.

Sheaf. n. f. sheaves, plural. [scap, Sax.
sheof, Dutch.]

1. A bundle of stalks of corn bound together, that the ears may dry.

These be the sheaves that honour's harvest bears;
The seed, thy valiant acts, the world the field.

He beheld a field,
Part arable and tith; whereon were sheaves
New reap'd: the other part sheep-walks and folds

The reaper fills his greedy hands,
And binds the golden sheaves in brittle bands.

2. Any bundle or collection held together.

She vanish'd;
The sheaf of arrows shook and rattled in the case.

In the knowledge of bodies, we must glean what we can; since we cannot, from a discovery of their real essences, grasp at a time whole sheaves, and in bundles comprehend the nature of whole species.

To SHEAL. v. a. To shell. See SHALE.

Thou art a shealed peacock. Shak. King Lear.
To SHEAR. pieter. shore, or sheared; part.
pass. shorn. [scapan, scynen, Saxon.
This word is more frequently written sheer, but sheer cannot analogically form shore or shorn: shear, shore, shorn; as tear, torc, torn.]

1. To clip or cut by interception between two blades moving on a rivet.

So many days, my ewes have been with young;
So many weeks, ere the poor fools will yeag;
So many months, ere I shall shear the fleece. Shak.
Laban went to shear his sheep. Gen. xxxi. 19.
When wool is new shorn, they set pails of water
by in the same room to increase its weight.

To lay my head, and hollow pledge
Of all my strength, in the lascivious lap
Of a deceitful concubine, who shore me,
Like a tame wether, all my precious fleece. Milton.
The tame ill taste of sense would serve to join Dog toys in the yoke, and shear the twine. Dryd.
May it thou henceforth sweetly sleep!
Shear, swains, oh shear your softest sheep
To swell his couch!
O'er the continental dust enjoin'd to shear
The graceful curl, and drop the tender tear. Pope.

2. To cut by interception.

The sharp and toothed edge of the nether chap strikes into a canal cut into the bone of the upper, and the toothed protuberance of the upper into a canal in the nether: by which means he easily shears the grass whereon he feeds. Grew.

To SHEAR. v. n. [In navigation.] To make an indirect course.

SHEAR. } n. f. [from the verb. It is sel-SHEARS. } dom used in the singular, but is found only in Dryden.]

1. An instrument to cut, consisting of two blades moving on a pin, between which the thing cut is intercepted. Shears are a larger, and scissors a smaller, instrument of the same kind. Pope uses shears for scissors.

Alas! thought Philoclea to herself, your shears come too late to clip the bird's wings that already are flown away.

Why do you bend such solemn brows on me?
Think you I bear the shears of destiny?
Is't a commandment on the pulse of life?

The facta prepere, that shear's a shear. Dryd.
When the fleece is shorn,
Then their defenceless limbs the brambles tear;
Short of their wool, and naked from the shear.

That people live and die, I knew,
An hour ago, as well as you;
And if fate spins us longer years,
Or is in haste to take the shears,
I know, we must both fortunes try,
And bear our evils, wet or dry.

How happy should we be if we had the privilege of employing the shears, for want of a mint, upon foreign gold, by clipping it into half-crowns

Fate urg'd the shears, and cut the sylph in twain
But airy substance soon unites again. Pope
Beneath the shears they felt no lasting smart;
They lost but fleeces, while I lost a heart. Gay.

2. The denomination of the age of sheep.

When sheep is one shear, they will have two broad teeth before; when two shear, four; when three, six; when four, eight: and, after that, their mouths break.

Any thing in the form of the blades of shears.

Wings, in Spenser.

Two sharp-wing'd shears
Decked with divers plumes, like painted jays,
Were fixed at his back to cut his airy ways.

SHEARD. n. f. [scapb, Saxon.] A fragment. It is now commonly written shard, and applied only to fragments of earthen ware.

In the burfing of it, not a shard to take fire from the hearth, or to take water out of the pit.

SHEARER. n. f. [from shear.] One that clips with shears; particularly one that fleeces sheep.

Of other care they little reck'ning make,
Than how to scramble at the shearers stake,
And shove away the worthy biaden guest. Milton.
Was he to be led as a lamb to the slaughter, patient and resigned as a sheep before her shearers?

SHEARMAN. n. f. [shear and man.] He that shears

Thy father was a shearer,
And thou thyself a shearman.

SHEARWATER. n. f. [laurus niger.] A fowl.

SHEATH. n. f. [scæðe, Saxon.] The case of any thing; the scabbard of a weapon.

The dead knight's sword out of his sheath he drew,
With which he cut a lock off all their hair.

Doth not each look a flash of lightning feel,
Which spares the body's sheath, yet melts the steel?

Swords by the lightning's subtle force distill'd,
And the cold sheath with running metal fill'd.

To SHEATH. } v. a. [from the noun.]

To SHEATH. } v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To inclose in a sheath or scabbard; to inclose in any case.

This, drawn but now against my sovereign's breast,
Before 'tis sheath'd shall give him peace and rest.

In his hair one hand he wreaths,
His sword the other in his bosom sheaths.

Is this her hate to him, her love to me?
'Tis in my breast the sheaths her dagger now.

The left foot naked, when they march to fight,
But in a bull's jaw hide they sheath the right.

The leopard, and all of this kind as goes, keeps the claws of his forefeet turned up from the ground, and sheathed in the skin of his toes, whereby he preserves them sharp for killing, standing them only when he jumps at his prey.

2. [In philosophy.] To obtrude any acrid particles.

Those active parts of a body are of differing natures when sheathed up or wedged in amongst others, in the texture of a concrete, and when extricated from these impediments.

Other substances, opposite to acrimony, are called demulcent or mild, because they blunt or sheath those sharp salts; as pease and beans.

3. To fit with a sheath.

There was no link to colour Peter's hat,
Walter's dagger was not come from sheathing.

4. To defend the main body by an outward covering.

I were to be wished that the whole navy throughout were sheathed as some are.

SHEATHWINGED. adj. [sheath and wing.]
Having hard cases which are folded over the wings.

Some insects fly with four wings, as all vaginipennous or sheathwinged insects, as beetles and dorr.

SHEATHY. adj. [from sheath.] Forming a sheath.

With a needle put aside the short and sheathy cases on earwigs backs, and you may draw forth two wings.

SHECKLATON. n. f.

He went to fight against the giant in his robe of shecklaton, which is that kind of gilded leather with which they use to embroider the Irish jackets.

To SHED. v. a. [scæban, Saxon.]

1. To effuse; to pour out; to spill.

The painful service, and the drops of blood
Shed for my thankless country, are requited
But with that surname of Coriolanus. Shaksp.
Comwell, I did not think to shed a tear
In all my miseries.

For this is my blood which is shed for many,
for the remission of sins.

Some think one gen'ral soul fills ev'ry brain,
As the bright sun sheds light in ev'ry star.

Around its entry wadding poppies grow,
And all cool simples that sweet rest bestow,
Night from the plants their sleepy virtue drains,
And passing sheds it on the silent plains.

You seem'd to mourn another lover dead,
My sighs you gave him, and my tears you shed.

Unhappy man! to break the pious laws
Of nature, pleading in his children's cause;
'Tis love of honour, and his country's good;
The consul, not the father, sheds the blood.

In these lone walls, their days eternal bound,
These awful arches make a noon-day light,
And the dim windows shed a solemn light,
Thy eyes diffus'd a reconciling ray,
And gleams of glory brighten'd all the day.

2. To scatter; to let fall.

Trees that bring forth their leaves late, and cast them late, are more lasting than those that sprout their leaves early, or shed them betimes.

So the returning year be blest,
As his infant months bestow
Springing wreaths for William's brow;
As his summer's youth shall shed
Eternal sweets around Maria's head.

To SHED. v. n. To let fall its parts.

White oats are apt to shed most as they lie, and black as they stand.

SHED. n. f. [supposed by Skinner to be corrupted from shade.]

1. A slight temporary covering.

The first Aletes born in lowly shed,
Of parents base, a rose sprung from a bride.

White oats are apt to shed most as they lie, and
black as they stand.

SHED. n. f. [supposed by Skinner to be corrupted from shade.]

1. A slight temporary covering.

The first Aletes born in lowly shed,
Of parents base, a rose sprung from a bride.

Though he his house of painted marble built,
With Jasper floor'd, and carved cedar set;
Yet shall it ruin like the moth's frail web;
Or fade of weeds which summer's heat reget.

In such a season born, when scarce a seed
Could be obtain'd to shelter him or me
From the bleak air, Milton's Paradise Regained.
So all our minds with his conspire to grace
The Gentiles great apostle, and deface
Those state-obscuring fables, that like a chain Seem'd to confine and fetter him again. Waller.
Those houses then were caves, or homely sheds
With twining osiers fence'd, and moss their beds.
Dryden.

An hospitable house they found,
A homely shed; the roof, not far from ground,
Was thatch'd with reeds and straw together bound.
Dryden.

Then out he steals, and finds where by the head
Their horse hung fasten'd underneath a shed.
Bretton.

Here various kinds, by various fortunes led,
Commence acquaintance underneath a shed. Swift.
Weak as the Roman chief, who strove to hide
His father's cot, and once his father's pride,
By calling a low shed of rural mould,
With marble walls, and roof adorn'd with gold.
Harte.

2. [In composition.] Effusion; as blood-shed.

SHE'DDER. n. s. [from shed.] A spiller; one who sheds.
A shedder of blood shall surely die.

Exek. xviii. 10.
SHEEN. } adj. [This was probably only SHE'ENY. } the old pronunciation of shine.] Bright; glittering; shewy. A word now not in use.

That low ribbald, with vile lust advanc'd,
Laid first his filthy hands on virgin clean,
To spill her dainty coise so fair and shewn. Fairy Q.
When he was all dight, he took his way
Into the forest, that he might be seen
Of the wild beasts, in his new glory shewn.

Hubb'd's Tale.
Now they never meet in grove or green,
By fountain clear, or spangled star-light shewn.
Shakespeare.

Up arose each warrior bold and brave,
Glittering in filed steel and armour shewn. Fairfax.
Out of the hierarchies of angels shewn,
The gentle Gabriel call'd he from the rest. Fairfax.
By the lushy fringed bank,
Where grows the willow and the osier dank,
My sliding chariot stays,
Which let with agat, or the azure shewn,
Of tureous blue, and emerald green. Milton.
Or did of late earth's sons besiege the wall
Of shewy heav'n. Milton.

SHEEN. n. s. [from the adjective.] Brightness; splendour. Not now used.
Mercy will sit between,
Thron'd in celestial shewn. Milton.

For above, in spangled shewn,
Celestial Cupid, her fam'd son, advanc'd, Holds his dear Psyche sweet entranc'd. Milton.

SHEEP. n. s. plural likewise sheep. [reap, Saxon, of which the plural was reep; sheep, Dutch.]

1. The animal that bears wool, remarkable for its usefulness and innocence.
Fire the brambles, scare the birds, and steep
In wholesome water-falls the fleecy sheep. Dryden.
Of substances there are two sorts of ideas; one of single substances, as they exist separately, as a man, or sheep. Locke.

2. [In contempt.] A foolish silly fellow.
Amfworth.

3. [In theology.] The people, considered as under the direction of God, or of their pastor.

We are his people, and the sheep of his pasture.

To SHEEP-BITE. v. n. [sheep and bite.]
To use petty thefts.

Shew your knave's visage, with a pox to you;
Shew your sheepbiting face, and be hang'd. Shak.
SHEEP-BITER. n. s. [from sheepbite.] A petty thief.
His gate like a sheepbiter fleeing aside. Tupper.
Wouldst thou not be glad to have the niggardly rascally sheepbiter come to some notable shame?
Shakespeare.

There are political sheepbiters as well as pastoral; betrayers of public trusts as well as of private.
L'Estrange.

SHE'EP-COT. n. s. [sheep and cot.] A little inclosure for sheep.
Bedlam beggars, with roaring voices,
From low farms, sheepcotes, and mills
Inforce their charity. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Up to a hill anon his steps he rear'd,
From whose high top to ken the prospect round,
If cottage were in view, sheepcot, or herd;
But cottage, herd, or sheepcot none he saw. Milton.

SHEEP-FOLD. n. s. [sheep and fold.] The place where sheep are inclosed.
The bear, the lion, terrors of the plain;
The sheepfold scatter'd, and the shepherd slain.
Prior.

SHEEP-HOOK. n. s. [sheep and hook.] A hook fastened to a pole, by which shepherds lay hold on the legs of their sheep.
The one carried a crozier of balm-wood, the other a pastoral staff of cedar like a sheep-hook.
Bacon's New Atlantis.
If you dare think of deserving our charms,
Away with you! sheephook, and take to your arms.
Dryden

SHEEP-FISH. adj. [from sheep.] Bashful; over-modest; timorously and meanly diffident.
Wanting change of company, he will, when he comes abroad, be a sheepish or conceited creature.
Locke.

SHEEPISHNESS. n. s. [from sheepish.] Bashfulness; mean and timorous diffidence.
Thy gentry bleat, as if thy native cloth
Transfus'd a sheepishness into thy story. Herbert.
Sheepishness, and ignorance of the world, are not consequences of being bred at home. Locke.
Without success, let a man be never so hardy,
he will have some degree of sheepishness. Grew.

SHEEPMASTER. n. s. [sheep and master.] A feeder of sheep.
A nobleman was a great grazer and sheepmaster.
Bacon.

SHEEP-SHEARING. n. s. [sheep and shear.] The time of shearing sheep; the feast made when sheep are shorn.
There happening a solemn festivity, such as the sheepshearings used to be, David begs some small repast. South.

SHEEP'S EYE. n. s. [sheep and eye.] A modest diffident look, such as lovers cast at their mistresses.
Cast a sheep's eye behind you: in before me.
Dryden.

SHEEPWALK. n. s. [sheep and walk.] Pasture for sheep.
He beheld a field,
Part arable and tilth, whereon were sheaves
New reap'd; the other part sheepwalks and fold. Milton.

SHEER. adj. [reyn, Saxon.] Bare; clear; unmingled.
If she say, I am not fourteen pence on the score for sheer ale; scot me up for the lying rogue in Christendom. Shakespeare.

Sheer argument is not the talent of the man;
little writhed sentences are the bladders which bear him up, and he sinks downright, when he once pretends to swim without them. Atterbury.

SHEER. adv. [from the adjective.] Clean; quick; at once. Not now in use, except in low language.

Thrown by angry Jove
Sheer o'er the crystal battlements; from morn
To noon he fell, from noon to dewy eve,
A summer's day; and with the setting sun,
Dropp'd from the zenith, like a falling star,
On Lemnos. Milton.

The sword of Satan, with steep force to smite Descending, and in half cut sheer. Milton.
Due entrance he disdain'd, and in contempt
At one slight bound high overleap'd all bound Of hill or highest wall, and sheer within Lights on his feet. Milton.

To SHEER. v. a. [See SHEAR.]
I keep my birth-day, lend my Phillis home
At sheering-time. Dryden.

unto him, as a great sheet, knit at the four corners.
Act, x. 11.

2. The linen of a bed.
If I die before thee, shroud me
In one of these same sheets. Shakespeare.
You think none but your sheets are privy to your wishes. Shakespeare.

Some unequal bride in nobler sheets
Receives her lord. Dryden.

3. [ecoutes, French; echoten, Dutch.] In a ship are ropes bent to the clews of the sails, which serve in all the lower sails to hale or round off the clew of the sail; but in top-sails they draw the sail close to the yard arms. Dict.—Dryden seems to understand it otherwise.
The little word behind the bark, and undoing whisper, like pulling off a sheet-rope at sea, slackens the sail. Suckling.

Fiercely Boreas drove against his flying sails,
And rent the sheets. Dryden.

4. As much paper as is made in one body.

As much love in rhyme
As could be crammi'd up in a sheet of paper,
Writ on both sides the leaf, margin and all. Shakespeare.
When I first put pen to paper, I thought all I should have to say would have been contained in one sheet of paper. Locke.
I let the refracted light fall perpendicularly upon a sheet of white paper upon the opposite wall.
Newton's Opticks.

5. A single complication or fold of paper in a book.

Their pretty pleasures might me move,
To live with thee and be thy love. Raleigh.

3. One who tends the congregation; a pastor.

Lead up all those who heard thee, and believ'd;
Thy own flock, great shepherd, be receiv'd,
And glad all heav'n with millions thou hast sav'd.
Prior.

SHEPHERDESS. n. f. [from shepherd.] A woman that tends sheep; a rural lass.

She perished into the garb of a shepherdess, and in that disguise lived many years, but, discovering herself a little before her death, did profess herself the happiest person alive, not for her condition, but in enjoying him the first loved; and that she would rather, ten thousand times, live a shepherdess
in contentment and satisfaction. Shaksp.

These your usual weeds to each part of you
Do give a life. no shepherdess, but Flora Peeking in April's front. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

She saw walking from her ward a man in shepherd's apparel. Shaksp.

SHEARBET. n. f. [ſharbat, Arabick.] The juice of lemons or oranges mixed with water and sugar. Dryden.

They prefer our beer above all other drinks;
and considering that water is with the rarest, especially in this climate, the dearest of shear-bets, and plenty of barley, it would prove infinitely profitable to such as should bring in the use thereof.
Sandys.

SHERD. n. f. [ſceap, Saxon.] A fragment of broken earthen ware. See SHARD.

The trivet table of a foot was lame;

Dryden.

To SHIELD. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with a shield.

2. To defend; to protect; to secure.

Were it my fitness
To let these hands obey my boiling blood,
They're strong enough to dillicate and tear
Thy flesh and bones. Lower a woman's shape Dost shield thee. Shaksp. King Lear.

Shows of applause ran ringing through the field,
To see the son the vanquish'd father shield. Dryden.

How one that comes to shield his injur'd honour,
And guards his life with hazard of her own. Smith.

3. To keep off; to defend against.

Out of their cold caves and frozen habitations, into the sweet soil of Europe, they brought with them their usual weeds, fit to shield the cold to which they had been inured. Spenser.

My love, I must interrupt the time alone.
—God bless I should disturb devotion. Shaksp.

To SHIFT. v. n. [Of this we d the original is obscure: ſhitta, Runick, is to change.]

1. To change place.

Vegetables being fixed to the same place, and so not able to shift and seek out after proper matter for their increment, it was necessary that it should be brought to them. Hudob.

2. To change; to give place to other things.

If the ideas of our minds constantly change and shift, in a continual succession, it would be impossible for a man to think long of any one thing. Locke.

3. To change clothes, particularly the linen.

She begs you just would turn you while she shifts.
Young.

4. To find some expedient; to act or live though with difficulty.

We cannot shift: being in, we must go on.
Daniel.

Men in distress will look to themselves, and leave their companions to shift as well as they can.
L'Estrange.

Since we desire no recompence nor thanks, we ought to be dismissed, and have leave to shift for ourselves. Swift.

5. To practise indirect methods.

All those schoolmen, though they were exceeding witty, yet better teach all their followers to shift than to resolve by their distinctions. Raleigh.

6. To take some method for safety.

Nature instructs every creature how to shift for itself in cases of danger. L'Estrange.

To SHIFT. v. a.

1. To change; to alter.

It was not levity, but absolute necessity, that made the fish shift the condition. L'Estrange.

Come, assist me, male obedient;
Let us try some new expedient;
Shift the scene for half an hour,
Time and place are in thy power. Swift.

2. To transfer from place to place.

Pare saffron between the two St. Mary's days,
Or set or go shift it that knowest the ways. Tupper.

3. To put by some expedient out of the way.

I shifted him away,
And laid good excuses on your ecstasy.
Shaksp. Othello.

The wisdom of all these latter times, in princes affairs, is rather fine deliveries, and shiftings of dangers and mischiefs, when they are near, than solid and ground a courses to keep them aloof.
Bacon.

4. To change in position.

Neither use they sails, nor place their oars in order upon the file, but carrying the oar back, shift it hither, and thither at pleasure. Raleigh.

Where the wind
Veers off, as oft she steers and shifts her sail. Mil.

We strive in vain against the seas and wind;
Now shift your sails. Dryden's Aeneid.

5. To change, as clothes.

I would advise you to shift a shirt: the violence of action hath made you seek as a sacrifice.
Shaksp. Cymbeline.

6. To dress in fresh clothes.

As it were to ride day and night, and not to have patience to shift me. Shaksp. Henry IV.

7. To SHIFT off. To defer; to put away by some expedient.

The most beautiful parts must be the most finished, the colour, and word, most chosen:
many things in both, which are not deserving of this care, must be shifted off, content with vulgar expressions. Dryden's Dastresbury.

Struggle and contrive as you will, and lay your taxes as you please, the traders will shift it off from their own gain. Locke.

By various situations of the devil they are prevented on to shift off the duties, and neglect the conditions, on which salvation is promised.

Rogers's Sermons.
SHIFT.

SHIFT, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Expedient found or used with difficulty; difficult means.

She redoubling her blows, drave the stranger to no other shift than to ward and go back; at that time seeming the image of innocency against violence. Sidney.

If I get down, and do not break my limbs, I'll find a thousand shifts to get away.

Shakespeare's King John.

This perfect artifice and accuracy might have been omitted, and yet they have made shift to move up and down in the water.

Moré's Antidote against Atheism.

Not any boast of skill, but extreme shift How to regain my sever'd company, Compell'd me to awake the courteous echo, To give me answer from her mossy couch. Milt.

A fashionable hypocrisy shall be called good manners, to we make a shift somewhat to legitimate the abuse. L'Estrange.

Those little animals provide themselves with wheat; but they can make shift without it. Add.

Our herbals are sufficiently stored with plants, and we have made a tolerable shift to reduce them to classes. Baker.

2. Indirect expedient; mean refuge; last resource.

The very custom of seeking for particular aid and relief at the hands of God, doth, by a secret contradiction, withdraw them from endeavouring to help themselves, even by those wicked shifts, which they know can never have his allowance whose assistance their prayers seek. Hooker.

To say, where the notions cannot fitly be reconciled, that there wanteth a term, is but a shift of ignorance. Bacon.

Slow to resolve, but in performance quick; So true, that he was awkward at a trick; For little souls on little shifts rely. Dryden.

Fraud; artifice; stratagem.

Know ye not Ulysses' shifts?

Thair swords less danger carry than their gifts. Denham.

Evasion; elusory practice.

As long as wit, by whetting itself, is able to find out any shift, be it never so slight, whereby to escape out of the hands of present contradiction, they are never at a stand. Hooker.

Of themselves, for the most part, they are to cautious and wily headed, especially being men of so small experience and practice in law matters, that you would wonder whence they borrow such subtilities and fly shifts. Spenser.

Hire you see your commission; this is your duty, these are your discouragements: never seek for shifts and evasions from worldly afflictions: this is your reward, if you perform it; this your doom, if you do not it. South.

A woman's linen.

SHIFTER, n. f. [from shift.] One who plays tricks; a man of artifice.

'Twas such a shifter, that, if death were known, Death was half glad when he had got him down. Milton.

SHIFTLINESS, adj. [from shift.] Wanting expedients; wanting means to act or live.

For the poor shiftless irrationals, it is a prodigious act of the great Creator's indulgence, that they are all ready furnished with such clothing. Lehman's Physico-Theology.

SHILLING, n. f. [from shilling, Saxon and Erse; schilling, Dutch.] A coin of various value at different times. It is now twelve pence.

Five of these pence made their shilling, which was shilling, probably from shilling, which was used for the fourth part of an ounce; eight of these shillings made their pound; hundred of these pounds were a legacy to a daughter, as appeareth by the last will of Alfred. Camden's Remains.

The very same shilling may at one time pay twenty men in twenty days, and at another rest in the same hands one hundred days. Locke.

Who, with much pains exerting all his sense, Can range aright his shillings, pounds, and pence. Young.

SHILL-I-SHALL-I. A corrupt reduplication of shall I? The question of a man hesitating. To stand shill-I-shall-I, is to continue hesitating and procrastinating.

I am somewhat dainty in making a resolution, because when I make it, I keep it: I don't stand shill I shall-I then: it I say 't, I'll do 't. Congreve's Way of the World.

SH'LY, adv. [from shy.] Not familiarly; not frankly.

SHIN, n. f. [Scina, Saxon; schien, German.] The forepart of the leg.

I bruised my shin the other day with playing at sword and dagger. Shak. Merry Wives of Windsor.

The shin bone, from the knee to the instep, is made by shadowing one half of the leg with a single shadow. Peacham.

His leg, then broke,

Had got a deputy of oak;

For when a shin in fight is cleft,

'The knee with one of timber's propt. Hudibras.

As when to an house we come,

To know if any one's at home,

We knock; to one must kick your shin,

Ere he can find your soul's within. Anonymous.

Celestial light

Shine inward, and the mind through all her powers Irradiate. Milton.

SHINE, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Fair weather.

Be it fair or foul, or rain or shine. Dryden.

He will accustom himself to heat and cold, and shine and rain; all which if a man's body will not endure, it will serve him to very little purpose. Locke.

2. Brightness; splendour; lustre. It is a word, though not unanalogical, yet ungraceful, and little used.

He that has injured his eyes to that divine splendour which results from the heauty of holiness, is not dazzled with the glittering shine of gold, and considers it as a vein of the same earth he treads on. Deacy of Purp.

Say, in what mortal soil thou design'st to grow? Fair op'ning to some court's propitious shine, Or deep with diamonds in the flaming mine? Pope.

- SH'NESS, n. f. [from shy.] Unwillingness to be tractable or familiar.

An incurable shyness is the vice of Irish horses, and is hardly ever seen in Flanders, because the winter forces the breeders there to house and handle their colts. Temple.

They were famous for their justice in commerce, but extreme shyness to strangers: they exposed their goods with the price marked upon them, and then retired. Arbutnot.

- SHINGLE, n. f. [schindel, German.] A thin board to cover houses.

The best to cleave, is the most useful for pales, laths, shingles, and waincoat. Mortim. Husbandry.

When Aldeboran was mounted high, Above the shiny Cassiopeia's chair, One knocked at the door, and in would fare. Fairy Queen.

The night

Is shiny, and they say we shall embattle By th' second hour o' th' morn. Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

While from afar we heard the cannons play, Like distant thunder on a shiny day, For absent friends we were ashamed to fear. Dryden.

- SHIP, [scap, scyp, Saxon; schap, Dutch.]

A termination noting quality or adjunct, as lordship; or office, as stewardship.

SHIP.

SHIP. n. f. [scip, Saxon; schippen, Dutch.] A ship may be defined a large hollow building, made to pass over the sea with sails. Watts.

All my followers to the eager foe
Turn back, and fly like ships before the wind.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

There made forth to us a small boat, with about eight persons in it, whereof one of them had in his hand a tipstaff, who made aboard our ship.

Bacon.

Two other ships loaded with victuals were burnt, and some of the men saved by their shipboats.

Knolles.

Nor is indeed that man less mad than thou, Who freights a ship to venture on the sea, With one frail intrepid plank to save From certain death, roll'd on by every wave.

Dryden.

Instead of a ship, he should lay upon his country such a sum of money, and retain the same to the treasurer of the navy: hence that tax had the denomination of ship money, by which accrued the yearly sum of two hundred thousand pounds.

Clarendon.

A ship carpenter of old Rome could not have talked more judiciously.

Adelphon.

TO SHIP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put into a ship.

My father at the road

Expects my coming, there to see me shipp'd.

Shakespeare.

The emperor, shipping his great ordnance, departed down the river. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.

All the timber was cut down in the mountains of Cilicia, and shipped in the bay of Attalia, from whence it was by sea transported to Pelasium.

Knolles.

A breeze from shore began to blow,
The sailors ship their oars, and cease to row;
Then hoist their yards a-trip, and all their sails
Let fall.

Dryden.

2. To transport in a ship.

Andronicus, would thou wert shipt to hell,
Rather than rob me of the people's hearts.

Shakespeare.

The sun no sooner shall the mountains touch,
But we will ship him hence. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
In Portugal, men spent with age, so as they cannot hope for above a year, ship themselves away in a Brazil fleet.

Temple.

3. It is sometimes enforced by off.

A single leaf can waft an army o'er,
Or ship off tenates to some distant shore. Pope.
The canal that runs from the sea into the Arno, gives a convenient carriage to all goods that are to be shipped off.

Adelphon.

SHIPBOARD. n. f. [ship and board.] See BOARD.

1. This word is seldom used but in adverbial phrases: a shipboard, on shipboard, in a ship.

Let him go on shipboard, and the mariners will not leave their starboard and larboard.

Bramhall.

What dost thou make a shipboard? To what end?

Dryden.

Ovid, writing from on shipboard to his friends, excused the faults of his poetry by his misfortunes.

Dryden.

They have made all thy shipboards of fir-trees, and brought cedars from Lebanon to make masts.

Isaiah.

Isaiah.

SHIPBOY. n. f. [ship and boy.] Boy that serves in a ship.

Few or none know me: if they did,
This shipboy's semblance hath disguis'd me quite.

Shakespeare.

SHIPMAN. n. f. [ship and man.] Sailor; seaman.

I myself have the very points they blow,
All the quarters that they know
I 'th' shipman's card.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Hiram sent in the navy shipmen that had knowledge of the sea.

1 Kings, ix. 27.

SHIPMASTER. n. f. Master of the ship.

The shipmaster came to him, and said unto him, What meanest thou, O sleeper! arise, call upon thy God.

Jon. i. 6.

SHIPPING. n. f. [from ship.]

1. Vessels of navigation; fleet.

Before Cæsar's invasion of this land, the Britons had not any shipping at all, other than their boats of twigs covered with hides.

Raleigh.

The numbers and courage of our men, with the strength of our shipping, have for many ages past made us a match for the greatest of our neighbours at land, and an overmatch for the strongest at sea.

Temple.

Fishes first to shipping did impart;
Their tail the rudder, and their head the prow.

Dryden.

2. Passage in a ship.

They took shipping and came to Capernaum, seeking for Jesus.

Jo. vi. 24.

SHIPWRECK. n. f. [ship and wreck.]

1. The destruction of ships by rocks or shelves.

Bold were the men, which on the ocean first Spread their new sails, when shipwreck was the work.

Wallar.

We are not to quarrel with the water for inundations and shipwrecks.

L'Estrange.

This sea was cost the Carthaginians five hundred quinquemes, and the Romans seven hundred, including their shipwrecks.

Arbutnot.

2. The parts of a shattered ship.

They might have it in their own country, and that by gathering up the shipwrecks of the Athenian and Roman theatres.

Dryden.

Holding faith and a good conscience, which some having put away, concerning faith, have made shipwreck.

1 Timothy, i.

TO SHIPWRECK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To destroy by dashing on rocks or shallows.

Whence the sun 'gins his reflection,
Shipwrecking storms and direful thunders break.

Shakespeare.

2. To make to suffer the dangers of a wreck.

Thou that canst still the raging of the seas,
Chain up the winds, and bid the tempests cease,
Redeem my shipwreck'd soul from raging gusts
Of cruel passion and deceitful lusts.

Prior.

A square piece of marble shews itself to have been a little part in monument of two persons who were shipwrecked.

Adelphon.

3. To throw by loss of the vessel.

Shipwreck'd upon a kingdom, where no pity,
No friends, no hope! no kindred weep for me.

Shakespeare.

SHIPWRIGHT. n. f. [ship and wright.]

A builder of ships.

Why such imprints of shipwrights, whose sore task
Does not divide the Sunday from the week? Shak.

A miserable shame it were for our shipwrights, if they did not exceed all others in the setting up of our royal ships.

Raleigh.

Vast numbers of ships in our harbours, and shipwrights in our sea-port towns.

Swift.

The Roman fleet, although built by shipwrights, and conducted by pilots, both without experience, defeated that of the Carthaginians.

Arbutnot.

As when a shipwright stands his workmen o'er,
Who ply the wrimble some huge beam to bore,
Ug'd on all hands it nimbly spins about,
The grain deep piercing, till it scoops it out.

Pope.

SHIRE. n. f. [scir, from roman, to divide, Sax. n.] A division of the kingdom; a county; so much of the kingdom as is under one sheriff.

His blazing eyes, like two bright shining shields,
Did burn with wrath, and sparkled living fire;
As two broad beacons, set in open fields,
Send forth their flames far off to every shore.

Fairy Queen.

The noble youths from distant shires resort.

Prior.

SHIRT. n. f. [shiert, Danish; reine, reyn, Saxon.] The under linen garment of a man.

Shift a shirt: the violence of action, hath made you seek as a sacrifice.

Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

I take but two shirts out with me, and I mean not to sweat extraordinarily.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

When we lay next us what we hold most dear,
Like Hercules, envenom'd shirts we wear,
And cleaving mischief.

Dryden.

Several persons in December had nothing over their shoulders but their shirts.

Adelphon on Italy.

TO SHIRT. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover; to clothe as in a shirt.

Ah! for too many souls, as but this morn
Were cloth'd with flesh, and warm'd with vital blood
But naked now, or shirted but with air.

Dryden.

SHIRTLESS. adj. [from shirt.] Wanting a shirt.

Linsley-woolsey brothers,
Grave mummings! sleevest some, and shirtless others.

Pope.

SHITTAN. n. f. A sort of precious wood, SHITTIM. } of which Moses made the greatest part of the tables, altars, and planks belonging to the tabernacle.

I will plant in the wilderness the shittab-tree.

Isaiah, xli. 19.

Bring me an offering of badgers skins and shittim-wood.

Exodus.

SHUTTLECOCK. n. f. [commonly, and perhaps as properly, shuttlecock.] Of shittle or shuttle the etymology is doubtful: Skinner derives it from schutteln, German, to shake; or reccan, Saxon, to throw. He thinks it is called a cock from its feathers. Perhaps it is properly shuttlecock, a cork driven to and fro, like the instrument in weaving, and loosened by frequent and rapid utterance from cork to cock.] A cork stuck with feathers, and driven by players from one to another with battledoors.

You need not discharge a cannon to break the chain of his thoughts: the pat of a shuttlecock, or the creaking of a jack, will do his business.

Cervier.

SHIVE. n. f. [schyve, Dutch.]

1. A slice of bread.

Easy it is

Of a cut loaf to steal a shive.

Shakespeare's Titus Andronicus.

Boyle.

TO SHIVER. v. n. [schawren, German.]

To quake; to tremble; to shudder, as with cold or fear.

Any very harsh noise will set the teeth on edge, and make all the body shiver.

Bacon.

What religious palsy 's this,
Which makes the boughs divest their bliss?

And, that they might her footsteps strow,
Drop their leaves with shivering awe.

Cleaveland.

Why stand we longer shivering under fear?

Milton.

The

The man that shiver'd on the brink of sin,
Thus steel'd and harden'd, ventures boldly in.
Dryden.

He described this march to the temple with so much horror, that he shiver'd every joint. Addison.
Give up Laius to the realms of day,
Whole ghost, yet shivering on Cocytus' sand,
Expect its passage to the farther strand. Pope.
Prometheus is laid
On his Caucasus to shiver,
While vultures eat his growing liver. Swift.

TO SHIVER. v. n. [from shiver.] To fall at once into many parts or shivers.

Hadst thou been aught but gossamer, feathers, air,
So many tathoms down precipitating, Thou'dst shiver n' d like an egg. Shak. King John.
Upon the breaking and shivering of a great state,
you may be sure to have wars. Bacon.
The natural world, should gravity once cease to be withdrawn, would instantly shiver into millions of atoms. Woodward.

TO SHIVER. v. a. To break by one act into many parts; to shatter.

The ground with shiver'd armour strown. Milt.
Shows of granades rain, by sudden burst
Diploding murderous bowels, fragments of steel;
A thousand ways at once the shiver'd orb
Fly diversely, working torment. Philips.

SHIVER. n. f. [from the verb.] One fragment of many into which any thing is broken.

He would pound thee into shivers with his fist,
as a tailor breaks a bituit.
Shakespeare's Titulus and Cressida.
As brittle as the glory is the lace,
For there it is crack'd in an hundred shivers.
Shakespeare.

If you strike a solid body that is brittle, it breaks, not only where the immediate force is, but breaketh all about into shivers and fitturs.
Bacon's Natural History.
Surging waves against a solid rock,
Though all to shivers dash'd, th' assault renew,
Vain batt'ry, and in smooth or bubble end. Milton.

SHIVERY. adj. [from shiver.] Loose of shells thus flatted, and extremely tender, in shivery stone. Woodward.

SHO-ADSTONE. n. f.

Shoadstone is a small stone, smooth without, of a dark liver colour, and of the same colour within, only with the addition of a faint purple. It is a fragment broke off an iron vein. Woodward on Pyrites.
Certain the stones lie on the face of the ground, which they call shoad, is shud from the main load,
and made somewhat round by the water.

The loads or veins of metal were by this action of the departing water made easy to be found out by the shoads, or trains of metallic fragments borne off from them, and lying in trains from thole veins towards the sea, in the same course that water falling thence would take. Woodward.

SHOAL. n. f. [scilicet, Saxon.]

1. A crowd; a great multitude; a throng.
When there be great shoals of people which go on to populate without relieving means of sustentation, once in an age they discharge part of them people upon other nations. Bacon.
A league is made against such routes and shoals
of people as have utterly degenerated from nature.
Bacon.

The vices of a prince draw shoals of followers, when his virtue leaves him the more eminent, because single. Decay of Policy.

A shoal of silver fishes glides
And plays about the barges. Waller.
God had the command of famine, whereby he could have carried them off by shoals. Woodward.

Around the goddess roll
Broad hats, and hoods, and caps, a sable shoal;
Thick, and more thick, the black blockade extends.
Pope.

full of shallow places.

Those who live
Where with his shoal's roars Vulturinus roars. Dry.
The watchful hero felt the knock, and found
The tossing vessel laid on shoaly ground. Dryden.

SHOCK. n. f. [chock, Fr. shocken, Dutch.]

1. Conflict; mutual impression of violence; violent concourse.

Thro' the shock
Of fighting elements, on all side round
Environ'd, wins his way. Milton.

2. Concussion; external violence.

It is inconceivable how any such man, that hath stood the shock of an eternal duration with out corruption or alteration, should after be corrupted or altered. Judge Hall.

These strong unshaken mounds resist the shocks
Of tides and seas tempestuous, while the rocks,
That fecit in a long continued vein
Puls through the earth, the pond'rous pile sustain.
Blackmore.

Such is the brawny man; his towering soul,
Midst all the shocks and injuries of fortune,
Rites superior and looks down on Cæsar. Addison.
Long, at the head of his few faithful friends,
He stood the shock of a whole host of foes. Addison.

The tender apples, from their parent rent
By stormy shocks, must not neglected lie
The prey of worms. Philips.

they contain any thing that shocks religion or good manners, they are
Perjæus impes rerum, nugæque canora. Dryden.

My son,
I bade him love, and bid him now forbear;
If you have any kindness for him, still Advice him not to shock a father's will. Dryden.
Julian, who lov'd each sober mind to shock,
Who laugh'd at God, and offer'd to a cock. Harte.
Those who in reading Homer are shocked that 'tis always a lion, may as well be angry that 'tis always a man. Pope.

TO SHOCK. v. n.

1. To meet with hostile violence.

And now with shouts the shocking armies clos'd,
To lances, lances, shields to shields oppos'd,
Communal death the fate of war confounds,
Each adverse battle gor'd with equal wounds. Pope.

2. To be offensive.

The French humour, in regard of the liberties they take in female conversations, is very shocking to the Italians, who are naturally jealous.
Addison's Remarks on Italy.

TO SHOCK. v. n. [from the noun.] To build up piles of sheaves.

Reap well, scatter not, gather clean that is shorn,

Milton.

2. To discharge as from a bow or gun.

I owe you much, and, like a witless youth,

That which I owe is lost; but if you please

'To shoot an arrow that fell way

Which you did shoot the first, I do not doubt

To find both.

Shakespeare.

This murderous shaft that's shot

Hath not yet lighted; and our latest way

Is to avoid the aim.

Shakespeare.

A pomp of winning graces waited still,

And from about her shot darts of desire

Into all eyes to wish her still in sight.

Milton.

3. To let off: used of the instrument.

The men shoot strong shoots with their bows.

The two ends of a bow shot off, fly from one another.

Boyle.

Men who know not hearts should make examples,

Which, like a warning-piece, must be shot off,

To fright the rest from crimes.

Dryden.

4. To strike with any thing shot.

Not an hand shall touch the mount, but he shall be stoned on shot through.

Exodus, xix. 13.

5. To emit new parts, as a vegetable.

None of the trees exalt themselves, neither shoot up their top among the thick boughs.

Ezek. xxxi. 14.

A grain of mustard groweth up and shooteth out great branches.

Mark, iv. 32.

VOL. II.

Tell like a tall old oak how leaning shoots
To heav'n her branches, and to hell her roots.

Durban.

6. To emit; to dart or thrust forth.

That gently waime

The universe, and to each inward part

With gentle penetration, though unseen,

Shoots invisible virtue ev'n to the deep. Milton.

Ye, who pluck the flowers,

Beware the secret snake that shoots a sting. Dryd.

The last had a star upon its breast, which shot a forth pointed beams of a peculiar lustre. Addison.

Find by the torch of noon to tenfold rage,

Th' infuriate bill forth shoots the pillar's flame.

Thomson.

7. To push suddenly. So we say, to shoot a bolt or lock.

I have laughed sometimes when I have reflected on those men who have shot themselves into the world; some bolting out upon the stage with vast applause; and some hustled off, quitting

it with disgrace. Dryden.

The liquid air his moving pinions wound,

And in the moment shot him on the ground. Dr.

8. To push forward.

They that see me shoot out the lip, they shake the head.

Psalmist.

9. To fit to each other by planing: a workman's term.

Straight lines in joiners language are called a joint; that is, two pieces of wood, that are shot, that is, planed, or else pared with a pairing chisel.

Mason.

10. To pass through with swiftness.

Thus having said, she flukes beneath the ground

With furious haste, and shoots the Stygian fount.

Dryden.

To SHOOT. v. n.

1. To perform the act of shooting, or emitting a missile weapon.

The anchors have sorely grieved him, and shot at him.

Genesis.

When he has shot his best, he is sure that none ever did shoot better. Temple.

A shining harvest either host displays,

And shoots against the sun with equal rays. Dryd.

When you shoot, and shut one eye,

You cannot think he would deny

To lend the other friendly aid,

Or wink, as coward and afraid. Prior.

2. To germinate; to increase in vegetable growth.

Such trees as love the sun do not willingly descend far into the earth; and therefore they are commonly trees that shoot up much. Bacon.

Onions, as they hang, will shoot forth. Bacon.

The tree at once both upward shoots,

And just as much grows downward to the roots. Cleveland.

The monarch oak, the patriarch of the trees,

Shoots rising up, and spreads by slow degrees. Dryd.

Nor will the wither'd stock be green again,

But the wild olive shoots, and shades th' ungrateful plain. Dryden.

New creatures rise,

A moving mass at first, and short of thighs;

Till shooting out with legs, and imp'd with wings.

Dryden.

The corn laid up by ant: would shoot under ground, if they did not bite off all the buds; and therefore it will produce nothing. Addison.

A wild where weeds and flow'rs promiscuous shoot,

Or garden tempting with forbidden fruit. Pope.

3. To form itself into any shape.

If the menstruum be overcharged, metals will shoot into crystals. Bacon.

Although exhaled, and placed in cold conservatories, it will crystallize and shoot into glacial bodies.

Brown.

That rude mass will shoot itself into several forms, till it make an habitable world: the steady hand of providence being the invisible guide of all its motions. Burns's Theory.

Expressed juices of plants, boiled into the consistence of a syrup, and set into a cool place, the essential salt will shoot upon the sides of the vessel.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

4. To be emitted.

There shot a streaming lamp along the sky,

Which on the winged lightning seem'd to fly. Dryden.

Tell them that the rays of light shoot from the sun to our earth at the rate of one hundred an eighty thousand miles in the second of a minute

they stand what at such talk. Mair.

The grand æthereal bow

Stands up immovable. Thomson.

5. To protuberate; to jet out.

The land did shoot out with a very great promounting, bending that way.

Altho' a Description of the World

This valley of the Pinol lies inclosed on all side by the Alps, though its dominions shoot out in several branches among the breaks of the mountains. Addison on Italy.

6. To pass as an arrow.

Thy words shoot thro' my heart,

Melt my resolves, and turn me all to love. Addi.

7. To become any thing by sudden growth

Materials dark and crude,

Of spiritous fiery spume, till touch'd

With heaven's rays, and temper'd, they shoot forth

So beautiful, opening to the ambient light. Mil.

Let me but live to shadow this young plant

From bites and worms, he'll soon shoot up a hero. Dryden.

8. To move swiftly along.

A shooting star in autumn thwarts the night.

Albion.

Where Tigris at the foot of Paradise

Into a gulf shot under ground, till past

Rose up a fountain by the tree of life. Milton.

At first the flutters, but at length the springs

To smother flight, and shoots upon her wings. Dryden.

The broken air loud whistling as she flies,

She stops and listens, and shoots forth again,

And guides her pinions by her young ones cries. Dryden.

Heaven's impetuous queen shot down from high

At her approach the brazen hinges fly,

The gates are forc'd. Dryden.

She downward glides,

Lights in Fleet-anch, and shoots beneath the river. Gay.

Where the mob gathers, swiftly shoot along,

Not idly mingle in the noisy throng. Gay.

Not half so swiftly shoots along in air

The gliding lightning. Pope.

9. To feel a quick glancing pain.

SHOOT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act or impression of any thing emitted from a distance.

The Turkish bow giveth a very forcible shoot

inasmuch as the arrow hath pierced a steel target

two inches thick; but the arrow, if headed with wood, hath been known to pierce through a piece of wood of eight inches thick. Bacon.

2. The act of striking, or endeavouring to strike, with a missile weapon discharged by any instrument.

The noise of thy cross-bow

Will scare the herd, and so my shoot is lost. Feak.

But come the bow; now mercy goes to kill,

And shooting well is then accounted ill.

Thus will I save my credit in the shoot;

Not wounding, pity would not let me do't. Shak.

As a country-fellow was making a shoot at a pigeon, he trod upon a snake that bit him. Leff.

3. [schutzen, Dutch.] Branches shooting from the main stock.

They will not come just on the tops where they were cut, but out of those shoots which were water-boughs. Bacon.

I saw them under a green mantling vine,

Plucking ripe clusters from the tender shoots. Mil.

Prun.

These of superfluous branches, and shoots of this second spring; but expose not the fruit without leaves sufficient. Evelyn.

The hook the bore
 To stop the growth of the luxuriant year,
 To decent form the lawless shoots to bring.
 And teach the obedient branches where to spring. Pope.

Now, should my plumes owe their truth
 To beauty, dress, or paint, or youth,
 'Twere grating on an annual stock
 That mud our expectations mock;
 And, making one luxuriant shoot,
 Die the next year for want of root. Swift.

PRIDE push'd forth buds at every branching shoot,
 And virtue shrunk almost beneath the root. Horne.

SHOOTER. n. s. [from shoot.] One that shoots; an archer; a gunner.
 The shooter owns the broad-leav'd sycamore. Fairfax.

We are shooters both, and thou dost deign
 To enter combat with us, and contend With thine own clay. Herbert.

The king with gifts a vessel stores;
 And next, to reconcile the shooter God,
 Within her hollow sides the sacrifice he stows. Dryden.

SHOP. n. s. [ycceop, Saxon, a magazine;
eschappe, French; shopa, low Lat. Ans- quorih.]

1. A place where any thing is sold.
 Our wind we are broke down,
 And we f'rtow compell'd to shut our shops. Shakspeare.

In his wedy shop a tortoise hung,
 An alligator sturt, and other skins
 Of ill-shap'd thins; and about his shelves
 A beggary account of empty boxes. Shakspeare.

Scarce any fold in shops could be relied upon as faithfully prepared. Boyle.
 His shop is his element, and he cannot with any enjoyment of himself live out of it. South's Sermon.

What a strange thing is it, that a little health, or the poor business of a shop, should keep us so senseless of these great things that are coming so fast upon us! Law.

2. A room in which manufactures are carried on.

Your most grave belly thus answer'd:
 True is it, my incorporate friends,
 That I receive the general food at first,
 Which you do live upon; and sit it is,
 Because I am the storehouse, and the shop
 Of the whole body. Shakspeare.

We have divers mechanical arts and stuffs made by them; and shops for such as are not brought into vulgar use. Bacon.

SHOPBOARD. n. s. [shop and board.]
 Bench on which any work is done.

That beastly rabble, that came down
 From all the garrets in the town,
 And stabs, and shopboards, in vast swarms,
 With new-chalk'd bills, and rusty arms. Hud.
 It dwells not in shops or workhouses; nor till the late age was it ever known that any one served seven years to a smith or a taylor, that he should commence doctor or divine from the shopboard or the anvil; or from whistling to a team come to preach to a congregation. South's Sermons.

SHOPBOOK. n. s. [shop and book.] Book in which a tradesman keeps his accounts.
 They that have wholly neglected the exercise of their understanding, will be as unfit for it, as one unpractised in figures to cast up a shopbook. Locke.

SHOPKEEPER. n. s. [shop and keep.] A trader who sells in a shop; not a merchant, who only deals by wholesale.

Nothing is more common than to hear a shop- keeper desiring his neighbour to have the goodness to sell him what is a clock. Addison.

SHOPMAN. n. s. [shop and man.] A petty trader.

Garb, generous as his muse, preferres and gives;
 The shopman tells, and by destruction lives. Dryd.

SHORE. The prerite of shear.

I'm glad thy father's dead;
 Thy match was mortal to him, and pure grief
 Shorn his old thread in twain. Shakspeare.

SHORE. n. s. [ycceop, Saxon.]

1. The coast of the sea.

Sea cover'd sea;
 Sea without shore. Milton.

2. The bank of a river. A licentious use.

Beside the fruitful shore of muddy Nile,
 Upon a sunny bank outstretch'd lay
 In monstrous length, a mighty crocodile. Spenser.

3. A drain: properly sewer.

4. [sheoren, Dutch, to prop.] The support of a building; a buttress.

When I use the word shore, I may intend thereby a coast of land near the sea, or a drain to carry off water, or a prop to support a building. Watts's Logick.

To SHORE. v. a. [sheoren, Dutch.]

1. To prop; to support.

They undermined the wall, and, as they wrought,
shored it up with timber. Kneller.
 He did not much strengthen his own subsistence in court, but stood there on his own feet, for the most of his allies rather leaned upon him than shored him up. Wotton.

There was also made a shoring or under-propping all for the benevolence; to make the sums which any person had agreed to pay leviable by course of law. Bacon's Henry VII.

2. To set on shore. Not in use.

I will bring these two blind ones aboard him; if he think it fit to shore them again, let him call me rogue. Shakspeare.

SHORELESS. adj. [from shore.] Having no coast.

This ocean of felicity is so shoreless and bottomless, that all the saints and angels cannot exhaust
 it. Boyle.

SHORFLING. n. s. [from shear, shore.]

The felt or skin of a sheep shorn.

SHOWN. The participie passive of shear:
 with of.

Shorn of his strength.
 Vile shorn are shorn for browze: the towering height Milton.

Of unctuous trees are torches for the night. Dryd.
 He plunging downward shot his radiant head;
 Dispell'd the breathing air that broke his flight;
 Shorn of his beams, a man to mortal light. Dryd.

SHORT. adj. [ycceop, Saxon.]

1. Not long; commonly, not long enough.

Weak though I am of limbs, and short of sight.
 Far from a lynx, and not a giant quite,
 I'll do what Mead and Cheseiden advise,
 To keep these limbs, and to preserve these eyes. Pope.

2. Not long in space or extent.

This less valuable earth,
 By shorter flight to the east, had left him there. Milton.

Though short my stature, yet my name extends
 To heav'n itself, and earth's remotest ends. Pope.

3. Not long in time or duration.

They change the night into day: the light is short, because of darkness. Job, xvii. 1.
 Nor love thy life, nor hate, but what thou liv'st
 Live well; how long or short permit to heav'n. Milton.

Short were her marriage joys: for in the prude
 Or youth her lord expell'd before his time. Dryden.

4. Repeated by quick iterations.

Her breath, then short, seem'd loth from home to pass,
 Which more it mov'd the more it sweeter was. Sidney.

Thy breath comes short, thy darted eyes are fix'd
 On me for aid, as if thou wert pursued. Dryden.
 My breath grew short, my beating heart sprung upward,

And leap'd and bounded in my heaving bosom. Smilh.

5. Not adequate; not equal: with of before the thing with which the comparison is made.

Immoderate praises the foolish lover thinks short of his mistress, though they reach far beyond the heavens. Sidney.

Some cottons here grow, but short in worth unto those of Smyrna. Sandys.

The Turks give you a quantity rather exceeding than short of your expectation. Sandys.

I know them not; not therefore am I short Of knowing what I ought. Milton's Par. Reg.

To attain
 The height and depth of thy eternal ways,
 All human thoughts come short, supreme of things Milton

O glorious trial of exceeding love,
 Engaging me to emulate! but, short

Of thy perfection, how shall I attain! Milton.
 To place her in Olympus' top a guest,
 Among th' immortals, who with nectar feast;

That poor would seem, that entertainment short
 Of the true splendor of her present court. Waller.

We err, and come short of science, because we are so frequently misled by the evil conduct of our imaginations. Glanville.

As in many things the knowledge of philosophers was short of the truth, so almost in all thing their practice fell short of their knowledge: the principles by which they walked were as much below those by which they judg'd, as their fee were below their head. South's Sermons.

He wills not death should terminate their strife
 And wounds, if wounds ensue, be short of life. Dryden

Virgil exceeds Theocritus in regularity and brevity, and falls short of him in nothing but simplicity and propriety of style. Pope

Defect in our behaviour, coming short of the utmost gracefulness, often escapes our observation Locke

If speculative maxims have not an actual universal assent from all mankind, practical principle come short of an universal reception. Locke

The people fall short of those who border upon them in strength of understanding. Addison

A neutral indifference falls short of that obligation they lie under, who have taken such oaths. Addison

When I made these, an artist undertook to imitate it; but, using another way of polishing them he fell much short of what I had attained to, as afterwards understood. Newton

It is not credible that the Phœnicians, who ha-established colonies in the Persian gulph, short short without pushing their trade to the Indies. Arbuth.
 Doing is expressly command'd, and no happiness allowed to any thing short of it. South's Sermon.

The signification of words will be allowed to fall much short of the knowledge of things. Baker

Addison's Freeholder.

SHREWD. adj. [contracted from shrewed.]

1. Having the qualities of a shrew; malicious; troublesome; mischievous.

Her eldest sister is so curst and shrewd,
That till the father rids his hands of her,
Your love must live a maid. Shakespeare.

2. Maliciously sly; cunning; more artful than good.

It was a shrewd saying of the old monk, that two kind of prisons would serve for all offenders, an inquisition and a bedlam: if any man should deny the being of a God, and the immortality of the soul, such a one should be put into the first, as being a desperate heretic; but if any man should profess to believe these things, and yet allow himself in any known wickedness, such a one should be put into bedlam. Tillotson.

A spiteful saying gratifies so many little passions, that it meets with a good reception, and the man who utters it is looked upon as a shrewd satirist.

Addison.

Corruption proceeds from employing those who have the character of shrewd worldly men, instead of such as have had a liberal education, and trained up in virtue. Ad'ison.

3. Bad; ill betokening.

Scarcely any man passes to a liking of sin in others, but by first practising it himself; and consequently we may take it for a shrewd indication, and sign, whereby to judge of those who have sinned with too much caution, to suffer the world to charge sins directly upon their conversation. South.

4. Painful; pinching; dangerous; mischievous.

Every of this number,
That have endur'd shrewd nights and days with us,
Shall share the good of our returned fortune.

Shakespeare.

When a man thinks he has a servant, he finds a traitor that eats his bread, and is readier to do him a mischief, and a shrewd turn, than an open adversary. South.

No enemy is so despicable but he may do a body a shrewd turn. L'Estrange.

SHREWDLY. adv. [from shrewd.]

1. Mischievously; destructively.

SHREWISNESS. n. f. [from shrewish.]

The qualities of a shrew; frowardness; petulance; clamorousness.

I have no gift in shrewisness,
I am a right maid for my cowardice;
Let her not strike me. Shakespeare.

SHREWMOUSE. n. f. [rcneapa, Saxon.]

A mouse of which the bite is generally supposed venomous, and to which vulgar tradition assigns such malignity, that she is said to lame the foot over which she runs. I am informed that all these reports are calumnious, and that her feet and teeth are equally harmless with those of any other little mouse. Our ancestors however looked on her with such terror, that they are supposed to have given her name to a scolding woman, whom for her venom they call a shrew.

TO SHRIEK. v. n. [skrieger, Danish; scricciolare, Italian.] To cry out inarticulately with anguish or horror; to scream.

On top whereof ay dwelt the ghastly owl,
Shrinking his baleful note. Fairy Queen.

It was the owl that shriek'd, the fatal belman
Which gives the sternest good night. Shakespeare.

Were I the ghost that walk'd,
I'd shriek, that even your ears should rise to hear me. Shakespeare.

In a dreadful dream

I saw my lord so near destruction,
Then shriek'd myself awake. Denham.

Hark! peace!

At this the shriek'd aloud; the mournful train Echo'd her grief. Dryden's Knight's Tale.

Why did you shriek out? Dryd. Spanish Friar.

SHRIEK. n. f. [skrieg, Danish; scriccio, Italian.] An inarticulate cry of anguish or horror.

Una hearing evermore

His rueful shrieks and groanings, often tore
Her guiltless garments, and her golden hair,
For pity of his pain. Fairy Queen.

Time has been, my senses would have cool'd,
To hear a night shriek, and my fall of hair
Would at a dismal treatise rouse me. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The corps of Almon and the rest are shown;
Shrieks, clamours, murmurs, fill the frighted town. Dryden.

SHRIFT. n. f. [scryft, Saxon.] Confession made to a priest. A word out of use.

Off with

Bernardine's head: I'll give a present for,
And will advise him for a better place. Shakespeare.

My lord shall never rest;
I'll watch him tame, and talk him out:
His bed shall seem a school, his board a shrift. Shakespeare.

The duke's commands were absolute;
Therefore, my lord, address you to your shrift,
And be yourself; for you must die this instant. Revue.

SHRIGHT, for shrieked. Spenser.

SHRILL. adj. [a word supposed to be made per onomatopœiam, in imitation of the thing expressed, which indeed it images very happily.] Sounding with a piercing, tremulous, or vibratory found.

The fun of all the world is dim and dark;
O heavy horse!

Break we our pipes that shrill'd as loud as lark,
O careful verse! Spenser.

Hark how the minstrels' gin to shrill aloud
Their merry musick that resounds from far,
The pipe, the tabor, and the trembling crowd,
That well agree withouten breach or jar. Spenser.

A shrilling trumpet sounded from on high,
And unto battle bade themselves address. Shakespeare.

Here no clarion's shrilling note
The muse's green retreat can pierce;
The grove, from noisy camps remote,
Is only vocal with my verse. Fenton's Ode to Lord Carter.

The females round,
Maids, wives, and matrons, mix a shrilling sound. Pope.

The world with the frozen zone,
Then, hie, thou and I will meet.

From a new shuffling and disposition of the component particles of a body, might not nature compose a body dissoluble in water?

In most things good and evil is shuffled, and thrust up together in a confused heap; and it is study which must draw them forth and range them.

When love air shuffled together in a lap or pitcher, what reason can a man have to presume, that he shall draw a white stone rather than a black?

A glimpse of moonshine shat'ld with red,
A shuffled, full on, and uncertain light,
That dances thro' the clouds and shuts again.

Children should not lose the consideration of human nature in the shuffling of outward conditions. The more they have, the better humoured they should be taught to be.

We shall in vain, shuffling the little money we have from one another's hands, endeavour to prevent our wants; decay of trade will quickly waste all the remainder.

These vapours form, miraculous event!
Shuffled by chance, and mix'd by accident.

 terwards to a butterfly.
 The worms were hatched that did breed the silk,
 And it was used in mummy, which the fatal
 Convey'd of maidens hearts. Shakespeare's Othello.
 2. The stuff made of the worms thread.
 Let not the creaking of shoes, or rustling of silks, betray thy poor heart to woman. Shakespeare.
 He couled the shote to be covered with Persian silk for him to tread upon. Kyd.
 Without the wain, in Persian silks we drive.
Water.

SILKEN. adj. [from silk]
 1. Made of silk.
 Men counsel and give comfort to that grief
 Which they themselves not feel; but tasting it,
 Their counsel turns to passion, which before
 Would give medicinal medicine to rage,
 Fetter strong madness in a silken thread,
 Charm'd with an ay, and a my with words. Shak.
 Now will we revel it,
 With silken coats, and cups, and golden images. Shak.
 She weep, and words avarice d her tears dissolve d,
 Weaving the borders of her silken veil. Milton.

2. Soft; tender.
 Full many a lady fair, in court full oft Beholding them, him freely envied,
 And wish'd that two such fans, by silk and soft,
 And gold in fan, her love would her preserve. Spenser
 All the youth of England are on fire,
 And fien dalliance in the waid's eye. Shakespeare Henry V.
 For then the bulls with pleasing shades are crown'd,
 And sleepers are twain on the silken ground. Dryden.
 Drest up virtue in all the features of oratory, and you will find the wild passions of men too violent to be restrained by such mild and silken language. Watts on the Mind.

3. Dressed in silk.
 Still a bodice boy,
 A cocked hat, lace waister, bare our fields,
 And flesh is spirit in a wicker tail,
 Mocking the air with colour'dly spread,
 And find no check. Shakespeare's King John.

 bred in the silkworm, and is the source of the silk. The Christian's Magazine.

SILK-WORM. n. f. [silk and worm] The worm that spins silk.
 O, if I could see the worm of whose country,
 and silkworms are so many. Shakespeare.

SILKY. adj. [from silk]
 1. Made of silk.
 2. Soft; pliant.

These kinds of knave, in shinnery,
 Hush me, and cry, and cry, and cry, and cry,
 'Tis twenty fifty dacking, or seven
 That fitter than date, more. Shakespeare, King Lear.
n. f. [silk, Saxon; sericeus, French,
 ; Dutch.] The number or sort of the of the diet
 The tanner's row,
 rown it with cows, and then silk,
 better we get out of them than silk;
 ad hardly waddles forth. Swift

SILLABUS. n. f. [This word has exercised the etymologists. Minshew thinks it corrupted from swilling bubbles. Ju-nus omits it. Heinsius, whom Skinner follows, deduces it from the Dutch sulle, a pipe, and buyck, a paunch; because sillabubs are commonly drunk through a spout, out of a jug with a large belly.
 It seems more probably derived from esil, in old English, vinegar; esil a bouc, vinegar for the mouth, vinegar made pleasant.] Curds made by milking upon vinegar.

Joan takes her neat rubb'd pail, and now
 She trips to milk the sand red cow;
 Whence, for some sturdy foot-ball swain,
 Joan strikes a sillabub or twain. Wotton.
 A treat,
 By some rich farmer's wife and sister drest,
 Might be resembled to a sick man's diet,
 Where all ideas budding run to fat,
 That sillabubs come first, and foms the last. King.

SILLILY. adv. [from silly.] In a silly manner; simply; foolishly.

I wonder much what thou and I Did till we lay d' we were not wear d till then,
 But lock'd on childish pleasures, Shakespeare.
 O, slumber'd we in the seven sleeper, d' n? Donne.
 We are caught as silly as the bird in the net.
L. Elphinstone.
 Do, do, look silly, good colonel, 'tis a decent and nobody after an absolute defeat. Dryden.

SILLINESS. n. f. [from silly.] Simplicity; weakness; harmless folly.

 the dignity of his character. Thackeray.

SILLY. adj. [silly, German. Skinner]
 1. Harmless; innocent; inoffensive; plain;
 and soft.

2. Weak; helpless.
 After long storms,
 In dread of death and dangerous dismay,
 With which my silly bark was toss'd to sea,
 I do at length drive the heavy shore. Spenser

3. Foolish; witless.
 Perhaps, or else than sheep,
 Was that did, or thoughts to busy keep. Milton.

The meanest subjects confer the actions of the greatest prince, the silly servants, of the wisest master. Gay.

I have no discontent at living here, bend what ails now a silly person of liberty, which I resolve to throw off. Swift.

Such parts of vintages are stupid or silly, talk or mistake, should become subject of occasional caution. Watts.

He is the companion of the silliest people in their not only pleasure, he is ready for every impudent conceit, and every error. Johnson.

SILVER. n. f. [perhaps from relix, happy, and heor, the head.] The mention that covers the head of the tatar.

Given to cover the head of the membranous covering, called the silva, sometimes found about the head of children upon the birth. Boerhaave's Vulgar Errors.

SILV. n. f. Mud; slime.
 So, as the sea of oak and fir plant in firm earth below the mud, near Thory, in all probab covered by sediment, and the silv and mud earth. Her.

SILVAN. adj. [from silva, Lat.] Woody;
 full of wood.

But in the woods, and in the silvan scene
 Appears that, and comes for ever green. Dryden.

SILVER. n. f. [sily, Saxon; silver,
 Dutch]

1. Silver is a white and hard metal, next in weight to gold. Watts's Logic.

2. Any thing of soft splendour.
 Pallas, piteous of her plaintive cries,
 In lumber clos'd her silver streaming eyes. Pope.
 3. Money made of silver.

SILVER. adj.
 1. Made of silver.
 Put my silver cup in the sack's mouth.

Hence had the huntress Dian her dread bow, Fair silver-shafted queen for ever chaste. Milton.
 The silver-shafted goddess of the place.
Pope's Odyssy.

2. White like silver.
 Of all the race of silver-winged flies
 Was none more favourable, nor more fair,
 Than Clammy. Spenser.
 Old Silbury, shame to thy silver hair,
 Thou mad invader of thy brain. Shakespeare.
 The great in honour are not always wise,
 Nor judgment under silver teeth lies. Sandys.
 Others on silver lakes and rivers bath'd
 Their downy breast. Milton.

3. Having a pale lustre.
 So sweet a kiss the golden sun gives not
 To those fresh morning drops upon the rose,
 As thy eye-beams, when their teeth rays have
 more
 The night of dew that on my cheeks down flows;
 Nor shines the silver moon one half so bright,
 Through the transparent bottom of the deep,
 As doth thy face through tears of mine give light. Shakespeare.

4. Soft of voice. This phrase is Italian,
voce argentina.

From all the groves, which with the heavenly
 noise
 Of their sweet instruments were wont to sound,
 And th' hollow hulk, from which their silver voice
 Were wont redoubled echoes to rebound,
 Did now rebound with a gentle but musical cry,
 And yelling flocks throw up into the sky. Spenser.
 It is my love that calls upon my name,
 How silver sweet found lovers tongue, by night
 Like sweetest music to act loving strain. Shakespeare.

TO SILVER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover superficially with silver.
 There he looks alive, I was,
 Silver d' o'er, and so was this. Shakespeare.
 The splendour of silver is more pleasing to the eye than that of gold, as in cloth of silver and silver repairs. Bo.
 Silvering will fully and canker more than golding. Bo.
 A glider shewed me a ring silvered over with mercenial fumes, which he was then to restore to its native yellow. Bo.

2. To adorn with mild lustre.
 He is robed, the sinking hollows sleep,
 And for long calmness forced over the deep. Pope.

SILVERBEATER. n. f. [silver and beat.]
 One that foliates silver

Silverbeaters chase the finest coin, is that which is most extensive under the hammer. Boyle.

SILVERTING. n. f. A silver coin.
 A thousand years, at a thousand silvertings, shall be but butters and thorns. Shakespeare, 4th Act.

SILVERLY. adv. [from silver.] With the appearance of silver.

Let me wipe off this honourable dew
 That silver doth progress on thy cheeks. Shakespeare.

SILVERSMITH. n. f. [silver and smith]
 One that works in silver.

Demetrius, a silver smith, made shrines for Diana.
Acts, xiv.

SILVERTHISTLE. n. f. [acanthium vul-gare, Latin.] A plant.

SILVERWEED. n. f. [argentina, Lat.] A plant.

SILVERTREE. n. f. [conocarpus dendron.] A plant. Müller.
SILVERY.

SILVER, adj. [from silver.] Resprinkled with silver.

A gritty stone, with small spangles of a white silvery tale in it. Woodward on Fossils.

Of all th' enamell'd race whole silvery wing Waves to the tepid zephyrs of the spring, Once brightest shin'd this child of heat and air. Dunciad.

SIMAR, n. f. [simarre, Fr.] A woman's robe.

The ladies dress'd in rich simars were seen, Of Florence suttin, flower'd with white and green. Dryden.

SIMILAR, adj. [similaire, Fr. from similis, Lat.]

1. Homogeneous; having one part like another; uniform.

Minerals appear to the eye to be perfectly similar, as metals; or at least to consist but of two or three distinct ingredients, as cinnamon. Boyle.

2. Resembling; having resemblance.

The laws of England, relative to those matters, were the original and exemplar from whence those similar or parallel laws of Scotland were derived. Hale's Common Law of England.

SIMILARITY, n. f. [from similar.] Likeness; uniformity.

The blood and chyle are mixed, and by attrition attenuated; by which the mixture acquires a greater degree of fluidity and similarity, or homogeneity of parts. Arbutnot.

SIMILE, n. f. [simile, Lat.] A comparison by which any thing is illustrated or aggraudized.

Their rhimes, Full of protest, of oath, and big compare, Want similes. Shakespeare's Titulus and Cressida
Lucentio supp'd me, like his greyhound,
Which runs himself, and catches for his master.—
—A good swift simile, but something curiish. Shak.

In argument,
Similes are like songs in love;
They much describe, they nothing prove. Prior.
Poets, to give a boost to a warm fancy, not only expatiate in their similes, but introduce them too frequently. Garth.

SIMILITUDE, n. f. [similitudo, Fr. similitudo, Lat.]

1. Likeness; resemblance.

Similitude of substance would cause attraction, where the body is wholly freed from the motion of gravity; for then lead would draw lead. Bacon's Natural History.

Our immortal souls, while righteous, are by God himself beautified with the tinct of his own image and similitude. Raleigh.

Let us make man in our image, man In our similitude, and let them rule Over the fish and fowl. Milton.

Similitude to the Deity was not regarded in the things they gave divine worship to, and looked on as symbols of the god they worshipp'd. Strlingfleet.

If we compare the picture of a man, drawn at the years of seventeen, with that of the same person at the years of thirtysix, hardly the least trace or similitude of one's face can be found in the other. South.

Fate some future bard shall join In sad similitude of griefs to mine;
Condemn'd whole years in absence to deplore,
And image chains he must behold no more. Pope.

2. Comparison; simile.

Plutarch, in the list of his tractate, by sundry similitudes, shews us the force of education. Wet n.
Tasso, in his similitudes, never departed from the woods; that is, all his comparisons were taken from the country. Dryden.

SIMITAR, n. f. [See Cimeter.] A crooked or falcated sword with a convex edge.

TO SIMMER, v. n. [a word made probably from the sound, but writt

simmer.] To boil gently; to boil with a gentle hissing.

Place a vessel in warm sand, increasing the heat by degrees, till the spirit simmer or boil a little. Boyle.

Their vital heat and moisture may always not only simmer in one sluggish tenour, but sometimes boil up higher, and forth over; the fire of life being more than ordinarily kindled upon some emergent occasion. Macle against A. b. n.

SIMNEL, n. f. [simnellus, low Latin.] A kind of sweet bread or cake.

SIMONIAK, n. f. [simoniaque, Fr. simoniacus, Lat.] One who buys or sells preferment in the church.

If the bishop alleges that the person presented is a simoniack, or unlearned, they are to proceed to trial. Aschiff.

SIMONICAL, adj. [from simoniac.] Guilty of buying or selling ecclesiastical preferment.

Add to your criminals the simoniacal ladies, who seduce the sacred order into the difficulty of breaking their troth. Spektator.

SIMONY, n. f. [simonie, Fr. simonia, Lat.] The crime of buying or selling church preferment.

One that by suggestion Tied all the kingdom; simony was fair play,
His own opinion was his law. Shak. Henry VIII.

Many papers remain in private hands, of which one is of simony; and I wish the world might see it, that it might undeceive some patrons who think they have discharged that great trust in God and man, if they take no money for a living; that it may be parted with for other ends less justifiable. Walton's Life of Bishop Sanderson.

No simony nor sinecure is known;
There works the bee, no honey for the drone. Garth.

TO SIMPER, v. n. [from rymbelan, Saxon, to keep holiday, Skinner.] He derives simper from the same word, and confirms his etymology by writing it simber. It is perhaps derived from simmer, as it may seem to imitate the dimples of water gently boiling.] To smile; generally to smile foolishly.

A modest countenance about her mouth between smiling and smiling, her head bowed somewhat down, seemed to languish with over-much idleness. Sudry.

I charge you, O men, for the love you bear to women, as I perceive by your smiling none of you hate them, to like as much as pleases them. Shakspere's As you like it.

Stars above smile and shine.
As having keys unto thy love, while poor I pine. Herbert.

Let then the fair one beautifully cry,
Or dress in smiles of sweet Cecilia thine,
With smiling angels, palms, and shaps divine. Pope.

SIMPER, n. f. [from the verb.] Smile; generally a foolish smile.

The wit at his elbow stored him in the face with so bewitching a grin, that the whistler relaxed his fibres into a kind of smiper, and at length burst out into an open laugh. Adams.

Great Tibbald nods: the proud Parnassian lacer,
The conscious smiper, and the jealous leer,
Mix in his look. Pope's Dunciad.

SIMPLE, adj. [simplex, Lat. simplex, Fr.]

1. Plain; artless; unskilled; undesigning; sincere; harmless.

Were it not to satisfy the mind of the simplex sort of men, these nice curiosities are not worthy the labour which we bestow to answer them. Waker.

They meet upon the way
A simple husbandman in garments grey.

I am a simple woman, much too weak
To oppose your cunning. Shakspere, Henry VIII.

O Ethelinda,
My heart was made to hit and pain with thine,
Simple and plain, and fraught with artless tenderness. Race.

In simple manners all the secret lies;
Be kind and virtuous, you'll be black and wise. Young.

2. Uncompounded; unmingled; single; only one; plain; not complicated.

To make the compound pass for the rich meta simple, is an adulteration or counterfeiting. Bacon.
Simple philosophically signifies single, but vulgarly foolish. Watts.

Among substance, some are called simple, both compound, whether taken in a philosophical or vulgar sense. If we take simple and compound in a vulgar sense, then all those are simple substances which are generally esteemed uniform in their nature: so every herb is called a simple, and every metal a mineral; though the chymist perhaps may find all his several elements in each of them. Watts's Logic.

Let Newton, pure intelligence, whom God To mortals lent, to trace his boundless works,
From laws, sublimely simple, speak thy fame In all philosophy. Johnson's Summer.

3. Silly; not wise; not cunning.

The simple believeth every word; but the prudent man looketh well to his going. Prov. xv.

Dick, simple odes too many show ye
My fervid complaisance to Chloe. Prior.

SIMPLE, n. f. [simple, French.] A single ingredient in a medicine; a drug. It is popularly used for an herb.

Of simples in these groves that grow,
We'll learn the perfect skill;
The nature of each herb to know,
Which cures, and which can kill. Drayton's Cynobid.

Our foster nurse of nature is repete,
The which he lacks; thit to provoke in him,
Are many simples operative, whose power
Will close the eye of anguish. Shak. King Lear.
He would ope his father's scrip,
And shew me simples of a thousand names,
Telling their strange and vigorous faculties. Milt.
Why virtue in this remedy lies in the naked simple itself, as it comes over from the Indies. Trapp.

Around its entrie, nodding poppies grow,
And all cool simples that sweet rest bestow;
Night from the plants their sleepy virtue drains,
And passing thence, it on the silent plains. Dryden.
Medicine is mine; what herbs and simples grow
In fields and forest, all their powers I know. Dryden.

TO SIMPLE, v. n. To gather simples.

As once the teaming bear he chas'd,
Lascivious Circ will the youth survey'd,
As simple on the flow'ry hills he stray'd. Garth.

SIMPLENESS, n. f. [from simple.] The quality of being simple.

I will hear that play:
For never any thing can be amiss,
When simplicity and duty tender it. Shakspere.

Such perfect elements may be found in that: four known bodies that we call pure ones; for they are least compounded, and approach most to the simplicity of the elements. Digby.

SIMPLER, n. f. [from simple.] A simplit; an herbarist.

SIMPLESS, n. f. [simpleste, Fr.] Simplicity; silliness; folly. An obsolete word.

Their weeds been not so nightly were,
Such simples might have them shroud,
They been yel'd in purple and pall,
They reign and rule over all. Spenser's Pastoral.

SIMPLETON, n. f. [from simple.] A silly mortal; a trifler; a foolish fellow. A

SIM

A country farmer sent his man to look after an ox; the simples went hunting up and down. L'Estrange.

Those letters may prove a discredit, as lasting as mercenary scribbles, or curious simples, can make it. Pope.

SIMPLICITY. n. f. [simplicitas, Latin; simplicité, French.]

1. Plainness; artlessness; not subtilty; not cunning; not deceit.

The two-minded Philoela was in their degree of well doing, to whom the not knowing of evil serveth for a ground of virtue, and hold their inward peace in better form, with an unspotted simplicity, than many who rather cunningly seek to know what goodness is, than willingly take unto themselves the following of it. Sidney.

They keep the reverend simplicity of ancient times. Hooker.

In low simplicity,
He lends out money gratis, and brings down
The rate of usance. Shakespeare.

Marquis Dorset, a man for his harmless simplicity neither disliked nor much regarded, was created Duke. Hayward.

Suspicion sleeps
At wisdom's gate, and to simplicity
Re signs her charge. Milton.

Of manners gentle, of affections mild;
In wit a man, simplicity a child. Pope.
The native elegance and simplicity of her manners were accompanied with real benevolence of heart. Female Quaker.

2. Plainness; not subtilty; not abstruseness.

Those enter into farther speculation herein, which is the itch of curiosity, and content not themselves with the simplicity of that doctrine, within which this church hath contained herself. Hammond's Fundamentals.

3. Plainness; not finery.

They represent our poet, when he left Mantua for Rome, dressed in his best habit, too fine for the place whence he came, and yet retaining part of its simplicity. Dryden.

4. Singleness; not composition; state of being uncompounded.

Mandrakes afford a puerile unpleasant odour in the leaf or apple, discoverable in their simplicity and mixture. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

We are led to conceive that great machine of the world to have been once in a state of greater simplicity than now it is, as to conceive a watch once in its first and simple materials. Barnet.

5. Weakness; silliness.

Many that know what they should do, would nevertheless dissemble it, and, to excuse themselves, pretend ignorance and simplicity, which now they cannot. Hooker.

How long, ye simple ones, will ye love simplicity, and souls hate knowledge? Prov. i. 22.

SIMPLIST. n. f. [from simple.] One skilled in simples.

A plant so unlike a rose, it hath been mistaken by some good simplicists for amaranth. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

SIMPLY. adv. [from simple.]

1. Without art; without subtilty; plainly; artlessly.

Accomplishing great things by things deemed weak;

Subverting worldly strong and worldly wise
By simply meek. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Of itself; without addition.

This question about the changing of laws concerning such laws as are positive, and do that now good or evil, by being commanded suddenly, which otherwise of itself were not the one or the other. Hooker.

Solely; solely.

Let man, no creature in the world is capable fection consisteth in that which is best for them, but not in that which is simply best, as ours doth. Hooker.

I will eat and drink, and sleep as soft
As captain shall; simply the thing I am Shall make me live. Shakespeare.

To say or to do ought with memory and imitation, no purpose or respect should sooner move us, than simply the love of God and of mankind. Milt.

4. Foolishly; sillily.

SIMULAR. n. f. [from simulus, Lat.] One that counterfeits.

Hide thee, thou bloody hand,
Thou perjuror, thou simular of virtue,
That art incestuous. Shakespeare's King Lear.

SIMULATION. n. f. [simulation, French; simulatio, from simulo, Latin.] That part of hypocrisy which pretends that to be which is not.

Simulation is a vice rising of a natural falseness, or artfulness; or of a mind that hath some main faults; which, because a man must needs disguise, it maketh him practise simulation. Bacon.

For the unquestionable virtues of her person and mind, he well expressed his love in an act and time of no simulation towards his end, bequeathing her all his mansion-houses, and a power to dispose of his whole personal estate. Wotton.

For distinction sake, a deceiving by word is commonly called a lye; and deceiving by actions, gestures, or behaviour, is called simulation or hypocrisy. South.

SIMULTANEOUS. adj. [simultaneus, Lat.]

Acting together; existing at the same time.

If the parts may all change places at the same time, without any respect of priority or posteriority to each other's motion, why may not bullets, closely crowded in a box, move by a like mutual and simultaneous exchange? Clayville.

SIN. n. f. [sýn, Saxon.]

1. An act against the laws of God; a violation of the laws of religion.

It is great sin to swear unto a sin,
But greater sin to keep a sinful oath. Shakespeare.

How hast thou the heart,
Being a divine, a ghostly confessor,
A sin abolver, to profess
To mangle me with that word banishment? Shak.

But thou that sleep, and think not on thy sin,
Pinch them. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

Thou knowest, Lord, that I am pure from all sin with man. Job. iii. 14.

2. Habitual negligence of religion.

See, death, and hell, have set their marks upon him,
And all their ministers attend on him. Shakespeare.

Dishonest shame
Of nature's works: honour dishonourable;
Sim-bred, how have ye troubled all mankind! Milton.

I would not soil these pure ambrosial weeds,
With the rank vapours of the sin-worn mould. Milton.

Is there no means, but that a sin-sick land
Should be let blood with such a poisonous hand? Daniel.

Vice or virtue chiefly imply the relation of our actions to men in this world; sin and holiness rather imply their relation to God and the other world. Watts's Logic.

Light from her thought, a summer's careless robe,
Fell each affection of this sin-worn globe. Brooke.

3. It is used by Shakespeare emphatically for a man enormously wicked.

Thy ambition,
Thou fearful sin, robb'd this bewailing land

Near Geneva are quarries of freestone, that run under the lake: when the water is at lowest, they make within the borders of it a little square, inclosed within four walls: in this square they sink a pit, and dig for freestone. Addison.

3. To depress; to degrade.

A mighty King I am, an earthly god;
I raise or sink, imprison, or set free;
And life or death depends on my decree. Prin.

Trifling painters or sculptors below infinite pains upon the most insignificant parts of a figure, till they sink the grandeur of the whole. Pope's Essay on Homer.

4. To plunge into destruction.

Heav'n bear witness,
And, if I have a conscience, let it sink me,
Ev'n as the ax falls, if I be not faithful. Shak.

5. To make to fall.

These are so far from raising mountains, that they overturn and sling down force before standing, and undermine others, sinking them into the abyss. Woodward.

6. To bring low; to diminish in quantity.

When on the banks of an unlook'd-for stream,
You sunk the river with repeated draughts,
Who was the last in all your host that thirsted? Addison.

7. To crush; to overbear; to depress.

That Hector was in certainty of death, and depressed with the conscience of an ill cause: if you will not grant the first of these will sink the spirit of a hero, you'll at least allow the second may. Pope.

8. To diminish; to degrade.

They catch at all opportunities of ruining our trade, and sinking the figure which we make. Addison on the War.

I mean not that we should sink our figure out of covetousness; and deny ourselves the proper conveniences of our station, only that we may lay up a superfluous treasure. Rogers.

9. To make to decline.

Thy cruel and unnatural lust of power
Has sunk thy father more than all his years,
And made him wither in a green old age. Rome.

To labour for a sunk corrupted state. Lyttelton.

10. To suppress; to conceal; to intervert.

If sent with ready money to buy any thing, and you happen to be out of pocket, sink the money, and take up the goods on account. Swift's Rules to Servants.

Gather more filth than any sink in town. Crawville.

Returning home at night, you'll find the sink strike your offended sense with double sink. Swift.

2. Any place where corruption is gathered.

What sink of monsters, wretches of lost minds,
Mad after change, and desperate in their states,
Weird and gail'd with their necessities,
Durst have thought it? Ben Jonson's Cataline.
Our soul, whole country's heav'n, and God her father.

Into this world, corruption's sink, is sent;
Yet so much in her travail the doth gather,
That the returns home wiser than she went. Dennet.

SINLESS. adj. [from sin.] Exempt from sin.

Led on, yet sinless, with desire to know
What nearer might concern him. Milton.

At that taster's fruit
The sun, as from Thyrcean banquet, turn'd
His course intended; else how had the world
Inhabited, though sinless, more than now.

Avoided pinching cold, and torching heat? Milt.
Internal ghosts and hellish furies round Environ'd thee; some howl'd, some yell'd, some shriek'd.

Some bent at thee their fiery darts, while thou Sat'st unappal'd in calm and sinless peace. Milton.

No thoughts like mine his sinless soul profane, Obscure of the sight. Dryden's Ovid.

Did God, indeed, insist on a sinless and unerring observance of all this multiplicity of duties, had the Christian dispensation provided no remedy for our lapses, we might cry out with Balaam, 4 is I who should live, if God did this? Rogers.

SINLESSNESS. n. s. [from sinless.] Exemption from sin.

We may the less admire at his gracious condescensions to those, the sinfulness of whose condition will keep them from carrying his vouchsafements into any thing but occasions of joy and gratitude. Rice's Seraphick Love.

SINNER. n. s. [from sin.]

1. One at enmity with God; one not truly or religiously good.

Let the boldest sinner take this one consideration along with him, when he is going to sin, that whe-that the sin he is about to do ever comes to be pardoned or no, yet, as soon as it is acted, it quite turns the balance, puts his salvation upon the venture, and makes it ten to one odds against him. South.

Never consider yourselves as persons that are to be seen, admired, and courted by men, but as poor sinners, that are to save yourselves from the vanities and follies of a miserable world, by humility, devotion, and self-denial. Law.

2. An offender; a criminal.

He is that which is too weak to be a sinner, but a sinner, which ne'er left man in the mire. Shakespeare's Titus.

Over the guilty then the fury shakes
The sounding whip, and brandishes her snakes,
And the pale sinner with her sisters takes. Dryden.
Phthisis, where sinners may have rest, I go,
Where flames refin'd in breasts feraphick glow. Pope.

Whether the charmer sinner it or saint it,
It fully grows romantic, I must paint it. Pope.

SINUATION. n. f. [from sinuate.]

A bending in and out.
The human brain is, in proportion to the body, much larger than the brains of brutes, in proportion to their bodies, and fuller of anfractus, or sinuations. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

SINUOSITY. n. f. [from sinuous.]

The quality of being sinuous.

SINUOUS. adj. [sinuatus, Fr. from sinus, Lat.]

Bending in and out.
Try with what disadvantage the voice will be carried in an horn, which is a line arched; or in a trumpet, which is a line retorted; or in some pipe that we call sinuous. Bacon.

These, as a line, their long dimension drew,
Straking the ground with sinuous trace. Milton's Paradise Lost.

In the dissections of herles, in the concave or sinuous part of the liver, whereat the gall is usually seated in quadrupeds, I discover an hollow, long, membranous substance. Brown.

SINUS. n. f. [Latin.]

1. A bay of the sea; an opening of the land.

Plato supposeth his Atlantis to have sunk all into the sea: whether that be true or no, I do not think it impossible that some arms of the sea, or sinuses, might have had such an effect. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

2. Any fold or opening.

To SIP. v. a. [sipan, Saxon; sippen, Dutch.]

1. To drink by small draughts; to take, at one application of the cup to the mouth, no more than the mouth will contain.

Soft yielding mine to water glide away,
And sip with nymphs air elemental tea. Pope.

2. To drink in small quantities.

Find out the peaceful hermitage;
The hairy gown and mossy cell,
Where I may sit and rightly spell,
Of every star that heav'n doth dwell,
And every herb that sips the dew. Milton.

3. To drink out of.

The winged nation o'er the forest flies:
Then stooping on the meads and leafy bowers,
They skim the floods, and sip the purple flowers. Dryden.

To SIP. v. n. To drink a small quantity.

She rais'd it to her mouth with sober grace;
Then sipping, offer'd to the next. Dryden's Rinaldo.

SIP. n. f. [from the verb.]

A small draught; as much as the mouth will hold.
Her face o' fire

With labour, and the thing she took to quench it
She would to each one sip. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

One sip of this
Will bathe the drooping spirits in delight,
Beyond the bliss of dreams. Milton.

SIPHON. n. f. [σίφων; sipho, Lat. siphon, Fr.]

A pipe through which liquors are conveyed.
Beneath th' incessant weeping of these drains
I see the rocky siphons stretch'd immense,
The mighty reservoirs of harden'd chalk,
Of stiff compacted clay. Thomson's Autumn.

SIPPER. n. f. [from sip.]

One that sips.

SIPPET. n. f. [top, sip, sippet.]

A small top.
Spanish; senior, Lat.]

SIR. n. f. [sir, Fr. seigneur, Ital. senior, Spanish; senior, Lat.]

1. The word of respect in compellation.
Speak on, sir,
I dare your worst objections: if I blush,
It is to let a nobleman out manners. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

But, sir, be sudden in the execution;
Withal obdurate; do not let him plead.

Shakespeare's Richard III.

Sir king,
This man is better than the man he slew. Shak.

At a banquet the ambassador desired the wife men to deliver every one of them some sentence or parable, that he might report to his king, which they did: only one was silent, which the ambassador perceiving, said to him, Sir, let it not displease you, why do not you say somewhat that I may report? He answered, Report to your lord, that there are that can hold their peace. Bacon's Apoph.

2. The title of a knight or baronet.

This word was anciently so much held essential, that the Jews in their addresses expressed it in Hebrew characters.

Sir Horace Vere, his brother, was the principal in the active part. Bacon's War with Spain.

The court forsakes him, a sir Bazaar hangs. Pope.

3. It is sometimes used for man.

I have admir'd
To try your taking of a false report, which hath Honour'd with confirmation your great judgment,
In the election of a sir so rare. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

4. A title given to the loin of beef, which one of our kings knighted in a fit of good humour.

It lost his roast-beef stomach, not being able to touch a sir-loin which was served up. Addison.

And the strong table grows
Beneath the smoking sir-loin, stretch'd immense
From side to side. Thomson's Autumn.

It would be ridiculous, indeed, if a spit, which is strong enough to turn a sir-loin of beef, should not be able to turn a laiks. Swift.

SIRE. n. f. [sire, Fr. senior, Lat.]

1. A father. Used in poetry.
He, but a duke, would have his son a king,
And raise his issue like a loving sire. Shak. II. VI.

A virgin is his mother, but his sire
The power of the most High. Milton's Par. Lost.

And now I leave the true and just supports
Of legal princes and of honest courts,
Whole sires, great partners in my father's cares,
Saluted their young king at Hebron crown'd. Prior.

Whether his hoary sire he spies,
While thousand grateful thoughts arise,
Or meets his spouse's tender eye. Pope's Corus to Brutus.

Scrocco and Libe, ch. Milton.

SIRRAH. n. f. [sir, ha! Minstrel.]

A compellation of reproach and insult.
Go, sirrah, to my cell;
Take with you your companions: as you look
To have my pardon, trim it handsomely. Shakespeare's Tempest.

Sirrah, There's no room for faith, truth, or honesty in this bosom of thine. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

It runs in the blood of your whole race, sirrah, to hate our family. L'Estrange.

Quels hon the goddess greets her son,
Come hither, sirrah; no, begone. Prior.

SIRUP. n. f. [Arabick.]

The juice of vegetables boiled with sugar.

Shall I, whole ears her mournful words did force,
Her words in sirup laid off sweetest breath, Relent. Sidney.

Not poppy, nor mandragora,
Nor all the drowsy sirups of the world,
Shall ever med'cine thee to that sweet sleep,
Which thou owed'st yesterday. Shakespeare's Othello.

And first, behold this cordial julep here,
That flames and dances in his crystal bounds,
With spirits of balm, and fragrant sirups mixt. Milton.

Those expressed juices contain the true essential salt of the plant; for if they be boiled into the consistence of a sirup, and set in a cool place, the essential salt of the plant will shoot upon the sides of the vessels. Ashburn.

SIRUPED. adj. [from sirup.]

Sweet, like sirup; bedewed with sweets.

Yet when there haps a honey fall,
We'll lick the sirup leaves: Drayton.

2. Woman of the same faith; a christian; one of the same nature; human being.

If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of food, and you say unto them, Depart in peace, be you warmed and filled; notwithstanding, you give them sister. James.

them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit? James, ii. 15.

3. A female of the same kind.

He chid the sisters,
And bade them speak to him. Shaksp. Macbeth.

4. One of the same kind; one of the same condition.

The women, who would rather wreathe the laws
Than let a sister-plaintiff lose the cause,
As judges on the bench more gracious are,
And more attent to brothers of the bar,
Cried, one and all, the suppliant should have right;
And to the grandame hag adjudg'd the knight. Dryden.

There grew two olives, closest of the grove,
With roots entwined, and branches interwove:
Alike their leaves, but not alike they smil'd
With sister-fruits: one fertile, one was wild. Pope.

SISTER in Law, n. f. A husband or wife's sister.

Thy sister in law is gone back unto her people:
return thou after thy sister in law. Ruth, i. 15.

SISTERHOOD, n. f. [from sister.]

Their wives do sit beside them, carding wool. May's Vigil

Aloft, in awful state,
The godlike hero sat
On his imperial throne. Dryden.

2. To perch.

All new fashions be pleasant to me,
I will have them whether I thrive or thee;
Now I am a tricker, all men on me look,
What should I do but sit cock on the hoop?
What do I care if all the world me fail,
I will have a garment reach to my tail. Bourd.

3. To be in a state of rest, or idleness.

Shall your brethren go to war, and shall ye sit here? Nem.

Why sit we here each other viewing idly? Milt.

4. To be in any local position.

I should be still
Plucking the gulls, to know where sits the wind;
Peering in maps for ports. Shak. Merch. of Venice.
Those

Appointed to sit there had left their charge. Milton.
The ships are ready, and the wind sits fair. A. Phillips.

5. To rest as a weight or burthen.

Your brother's death sits at your heart. Shak.

To toils and sling, and to be restless, only gals our loves, and makes the burden that is upon us sit more uneasy. Tillotson.

Fear, the last of ills, remain'd behind,
And hurr'd heavy far on every mind. Dryden.
Our whole endeavours are intent to get rid of the present evil, as the first necessary condition to our happiness. Nothing, as we passionately think, can equal the uneasiness that sits so heavy upon us. Locke.

6. To settle; to abide.

That this new comer, shame,
There fit not and reproach us. Milton.

When Thetis blubb'd in purple not her own,
And from her face the breathing winds were blown,
A sudden sleep sat upon the sea,
And sweeping oars with struggling urg'd their way. Dryden.

He to the void advanc'd his pace;
Pale horror sat on each Arcadian face. Dryden.

7. To brood; to incubate.

As the partridge sits on eggs, and hatcheth them not, so he that getteth riches not by right, shall leave them in the midst of his days. Jer. xvii. 11.

The egg laid, and severed from the body of the hen, hath no more nourishment from the hen; but only a quickening heat when the sits it. Bacon's Natural History.

She mistakes a piece of chalk for an egg, and sits upon it in the same manner. Addison.

8. To be adjusted; to be with respect to fitness or unfitness, decorum or indecorum.

This new and gorgeous garment, majesty,
Sits not so easy on me as you think. Shaksp.peare.
Heav'n knows.

By what by-paths and indirect crook'd ways
I met this crown; and I myself know well,
How troublesome it sat upon my head,
To thee it shall descend with better quiet. Shaksp.

Your preferring that to all other considerations, does, in the eyes of all men, fit well upon you. Locke.

9. To be placed in order to be painted.

One is under no more obligation to extol every thing he finds in the author he translates, than a painter is to make every face that sits to him handsome. Garth.

10. To be in any situation or condition.

As a farmer cannot husband his ground so well, if he fit at a great rent; so the merchant cannot drive his trade so well, if he fit at great usury. Bacon.

Suppose all the church-lands were thrown up to the laity; would the tenants fit easier in their rents than now? Swift.

11. To be convened, as an assembly of a public or authoritative kind; to hold a session; as, the parliament sits; the last general council sate at Trent.

12. To be placed at the table.

Whether is greater, he that sits at meat, or he that serveth? Luke, xxii. 27.

13. To exercise authority.

The judgment shall fit, and take away his dominion. Daniel.
Ases are ye that fit in judgment. Judges, v. 10.
Down to the golden Chersonese, or where The Persian in Ecbatan sate. Milton.
One council sits upon life and death, the other is for taxes, and a third for the distributions of justice. Addison.

Assert, ye fair ones, who in judgment sit,
Your ancient empire over love and wit. Rowe.

14. To be in any solemn assembly as a member.

Three hundred and twenty men sat in council daily. 1 Mac.

15. To SIT down. Down is little more than emphatical.

Go and fit down to meat. Luke, xvii. 7.
When we fit down to our meal, we need not suspect the intrusion of armed uninvited guests. Decay of Piety.

16. To SIT down. To begin a siege.

Nor would the enemy have sate down before it, did they had done their business in all other respects. Clarendon.

small game, and to make use of arguments, such as will not prove a base inexpediency. Bishop Sanderson's Judgment.

20. To SIT up. To rise from lying to sitting.

He that was dead, sat up, and began to speak. Luke, vii.

21. To SIT up. To watch; not to go to bed.

Be courtly,
And entertain, and feast, fit up, and revel;
Call all the great, the fair, and spirited dames
Of Rome about thee, and begin a fashion
Of freedom. Ben Jonson.
Some fit up late at winter-fires, and fit
Their sharp-edg'd tools. May.
Most children shorten that time by sitting up with the company at night. Locke.

TO SIT, v. a.

1. To keep the seat upon.

Hardly the mule can fit the head-strong horse,
Nor would she, if she could, check his impetu-ous force. Prior.

2. [When the reciprocal pronoun follows fit, it seems to be an active verb.] To place on a seat.

The happiest youth viewing his progress through
What perils past, what croiles to ensue,
Would shut the book, and fit him down and die. Shaksp.peare.

He came to visit us, and, calling for a chair, sat him down, and we sat down with him. Bacon.

Thus fenc'd,
But not at rest or ease of mind,
They sat them down to weep. Milton.

3. To be settled to do business. This is rather neuter.

The court was sat before Sir Roger came, but the justices made room for the old knight at the head of them. Addison.

SIT, n. f. [situs, Lat.]

1. Situation; local position.

The city self he strongly fortifies,
Three sides by sit it well defended has. Fairfax.
Manifold streams of goodly navigable rivers, as so many chains environed the same sit and temple. Bacon.

If we consider the heart in its constituent parts, we shall find nothing singular, but what is in any muscle. 'Tis only the sit and posture of their several parts that give it the form and functions of a heart. Bensley.

Before my view appear'd a structure fair;
Its sit uncertain, if on earth or air. Pope.

2. It is taken by Thomson for posture or situation of a thing, with respect to itself; but improperly.

And leaves the semblance of a lover fix'd
In melancholy sit, with head declin'd,
And love-dejected eyes. Thomson's Spring.

SITFAST, n. f. [fit and fast.] A hard knob growing under the saddle.

Farrar's Dict.

SITH, adv. [sith, Sax.] Since; seeing that. Obsolete.

What ceremony of odours used about the bodies of the dead! after which custom, notwithstanding, sith it was their custom, our Lord was contented that his own most precious blood should be in-tomb'd. Hosker.

I thank you for this profit, and from hence
I'll love no friend, sith love breeds such offence. Shaksp.peare.

SITH, n.

SITHE. n. f. [sith, Saxon.] This word is very variously written by authors: I have chosen the orthography which is at once most simple and most agreeable to etymology. The instrument of mowing; a crooked blade joined at right angles to a long pole.

Let sith, that all hunt after in their lives,
Live register'd upon our brazen tombs;
And then grace us in the disgrace of death:
When, spite of cormorant devouring time,
Th' endeavour of this present breath may buy
That honour, which shall bate his sythe's keen edge,

And make us heirs of all eternity. Shakespeare.

Time is commonly drawn up in tombs, in gardens, and other places, an old man, bald, winged, with a sith and an hour-glass. Park on Drawing.

There rude impetuous rage does storm and fret;
And there, as master of this murdering brood,
Swinging a huge sythe, stands impartial death,
With endless business almost out of breath. Croshaw.

While the milk-maid singeth blithe,

And the mower whets his sith. Milton.

The brazen trumpets kindle rage no more,

But useless lances into siths shall bend,

And the broad sculchon in a ploughshare end. Pope.

Grav'd o'er their seats the form of Time was found,

His sythe revers'd, and both his pinions bound. Pope.

But, Stella, say what evil tongue

Reports you are no longer young?

That Time sits with his sith to mow

Where erst sat Cupid with his bow? Swift.

SITHE. n. f. Time. Obsolete.

The foolish man theret' woxe wondrous blith,

And humbly thanked him a thousand siths. Spenser.

SITHE. adv. [now contracted to since.]

See SINCE.] Since; in latter times.

This over-running and wasting of the realm was the beginning of all the other evils which sithence have afflicted that land.

Spenser's State of Ireland.

SITNESS. adv. Since. Spenser.

SITTER. n. f. [from sith.]

1. One that sits.

The Turks are great sitters, and seldom walk, whereby they sweat less, and need bathing more. Bacon.

2. A bird that broods.

The oldest hens are reckoned the best sitters;

and the youngest the best layers. Mort. H. Hambray.

SITTING. n. f. [from sith.]

1. The posture of sitting on a seat.

2. The act of resting on a seat.

Thou knowest my down-sitting, and mine uprising. Malton.

3. A time at which one exhibits himself to a painter.

Few good pictures have been finished at one sitting; neither can a good play be produced at a heat. Dryden.

4. A meeting of an assembly.

I'll write you down,

Th' which shall point you forth at every sitting,

What you must say. Shakespeare.

I wish it may at that sitting concluded, as the necessity of the time prescribes. Bacon.

5. A course of study uninterrupted.

For the understanding of any one of St. Paul's epistles, I read it all through at one sitting. Locke.

6. A time for which one sits, as at play, or work, or a visit.

What more than madmen's propensities

When one sits, or many hundred

And not enough rest had to sitting?

Board was, on a German's liver. Dryden.

7. Incubation.

Whilst the hen is covering her eggs, the male bird takes his stand upon a neighbouring bough, and amuses her with his songs during the whole time of her sitting. Addison.

SITUATE. part. adj. [from situs, Lat.]

1. Placed with respect to any thing else.

He was resolv'd to chuse a war, rather than to have Bretagne carried by France, being so great and opulent a duchy, and situate so opportunely to annoy England. Bacon.

Within a trading town they long abide,

Full fairly situate on a haven's side.

Dryden's Nihil Prius.

The eye is a part so artificially compos'd, and commonly situate, as nothing can be contriv'd better for use, ornament, or security.

Ray on the Creation.

2. Placed; confining.

South hath this variety from heav'n,

Of pleasure situate in hill and dale. Milt. Par. Lost.

SITUATION. n. f. [from situate; situation,

Fr.]

1. Local respect; position.

Prince Cafarini has a palace in a pleasant situ- ation, and set off with many beautiful walks.

Addison's Italy.

2. Condition; state.

and tranquillity in human life, yet this is by no means fit to be the subject of all men's petitions to God. Rogers's Sermons.

3. Temporary state; circumstances. Used of persons in a dramatick scene.

SIX. n. f. [six, Fr.] Twice three; one more than five.

No incident in the piece or play but must carry on the main design, all things else are like six fingers to the hand, when nature can do her work with five. Dryden.

That of six hath many respects in it, not only for the days of the creation, but its natural consideration, as being a perfect number.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Six and seven. n. f. To be at six and seven,

is to be in a state of disorder and confusion. A ludicrous expression that has been long in use.

All is uneven,

And even, six and seven. Shakespeare.

In 1488 there is in the see of Rome a fierce thundering war, that would let all at six and seven, or at six and five, if you allude to his name. Bacon.

What blunder bargain ere was drawn,

Or wages laid at six and seven. Hudibras.

John once tumbled his mother out of doors, to his great sorrow; for his affairs went on at six and seven. Arbutnot.

The goddess would no longer wait;

But, rising from her chair of state,

Left all below at six and seven.

Harriet's doves, and flew to heav'n. Swift.

SIXPENCE. n. f. [six and pence.] A coin;

half a shilling.

Where have you left the money that I gave you?

Oh!—sixpence that I had. Shakespeare.

The wisest man might blush,

If I—had sixpence more than he. Pope.

SIXSCORE. adj. [six and score.] Six times twenty.

Sixscore and five miles it containeth in circuit.

Sardis.

The crown of Spain hath enlarged the bound of heretofore within this last sixscore years, much more than the Ottoman. Bacon.

SIXTY. n. f. [sixtyne, Saxon.] Six and ten.

I've turned the voice thirteen times; and I have heard of others that it would return sixty times.

Bacon.

If men lived but twenty years, we should be satisfied if they died about sixty or eighty.

Taylor.

SIXTEENTH. adj. [sixteenda, Saxon.]

The sixth after the tenth; the ordinal of sixteen.

The first lot came forth to Jehoiadab, the six- teenth to Immer. 1 Chron. xxiv. 14.

SIXTH. adj. [sixta, Saxon.] The first after the fifth; the ordinal of six.

You are more clement than vile men,

Who of their broken debtors take

A sixth, letting them thrive again. Shakespeare.

There succeeded to the kingdom of England

James the Sixth, then king of Scotland. Bacon.

SIXTH. n. f. [from the adjective.] A sixth part.

Only the other half would have been a tolerable seat for rational creatures, and five sixths of the whole globe would have been rendered useless.

Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

SIXTHLY. adv. [from six.] In the sixth place.

Scarcely, living creatures have more diversity of organs than plants. Bacon.

SIXTIETH. adj. [sixteogoda, Saxon.]

The tenth six times repeated; the ordinal of sixty.

Let the appearing circle of the fire be three times diameter, and the time of one entire circulation of it the sixtieth part of a minute, in a whole day

there will be but 86,400 such parts. Digby on Belles.

SIXTY. adj. [sixty, Saxon.] Six times

ten.

When the boats were come within sixty yards of the pillars, they found themselves all bound, and could go no further. Bacon.

Of which 7 times 9, or the year 63, is conceived to carry with it the most considerable fatality.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

SIZE. n. f. [perhaps rather cise, from meis,

Latin; or from assise, French.]

1. Bulk; quantity of superficies; comparative magnitude.

I ever ventur'd my friends,

With all the size that venty

Would without lapsing suffer. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

If any decayed ship be new made, it is not fit to make her a size less than bigger. Rail g.

The distance judg'd for shot of every size,

The stocks touch, the pond'rous ball expires. Dryden.

Objects near our view are thought greater than those of a larger size, that are more remote. Locke.

'Tis the martial godless,

Like thee, Telemachus, in voice and size,

With speed divine, from street to street the flies. Pope.

2. [assise, old French.] A settled quantity.

In the following passage it seems to signify the allowance of the table; whence they say a fixer at Cambridge.

'Tis not in thee

To cut off my train, to scant my fixer,

And, in conclusion, to oppose the belt

Against my coming in. Shakespeare's King Lear.

3. Figurative bulk; condition.

This agrees too in the contempt of men of a less size and quality. Locke.

They do not consider the difference between a cla-ssionate discourse, delivered to princes or parliaments, and a plain sermon, for the adding or lower size of periphrasis. Swift.

4. [Ma, Italian.] Any viscous or glutinous substance.

TO SIZE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To adjust or arrange according to size.

The axes weigh the geese they carry,

And, ere they venture on a dream,

Know how to size themselves and them. Hudibras.

Two troops so match'd were never to be found,

Such bodies built for strength, or equal age,

In nature size'd. Dryden's Knight's Tale.

2. [from

SKETCH. n. f. [from sketch.] To settle; to fix.
There was a fixture for dispersing the standard of the east water throughout England; thereby to fix weights and measures. Bacon's Henry VII.
3. To cover with glutinous matter; to be smeared with slime.
SIZED. adj. [from size.] Having a particular magnitude.
What my love is, proof hath made you know, And as my love is sized, my fear is so. Shakspeare.
That will be a great horse to a Welshman, which is but a small one to a Fleming; having, from the different breed of their countries, taken several sized ideas, to which they compare their great and their little. Locke.
SIZABLE. adj. [from size.] Reasonably bulky; of just proportion to others.
He should be purged, sweated, vomited, and starved, till he come to a sizable bulk. Asbuthnot.
SIZER OR SERVITOR. n. f. A certain rank of students in the universities.

A buttrice and pincers, a hammer and nail, An apron and sizers for head and for tail. Tuffin.
SIZINGS. n. f. [from size.] Glutinousness; viscosity.
In rheumatism, the sinews pass off thick contents in the urine, or glutinous sweat. Flower on the Humors.
Cold is capable of producing a sinewiness and viscosity in the blood. Asbuthnot.
SIZY. adj. [from size.] Viscous; glutinous.
The blood is sizey, the alkaline salts in the serum producing coriaceous concretions. Asbuthnot on Diet.
SKADDLE. n. f. [from scadda, Sax. scath is harm; thence scathle, scaddle] Hurt; damage. DiA.
SKADDONS. n. f. The embryos of bees. Bailey.
SKINN. n. f. [from skinn, Fr.] A knot of thread or silk wound and doubled.
Why art thou then exasperate, thou idle immaterial skin of sleigh silk, thou rascal of a prodigal's purse? Shakspeare.
Our silk should be like a skin of silk, to be found by the right thread, not unravelled or perplexed. Then all is a knot, a heap. Ben Jonson.
Refuses, so lazy a brain as mine is, grows soon weary when it has to entangle a skin as this to unwind. Digby.
SKANSMATE. n. f. [I suppose from skinn, or skan, a knife, and mate.] A messmate. It is remarkable that met, Dutch, is a knife.
Scurvy knave, I am none of his flirt gills; I am none of his skansmates. Shakspeare's Romeo and Juliet.
SKATE. n. f. [from scabba, Saxon.]
1. A flat sea-fish.
2. A sort of shoe armed with iron, for sliding on the ice.

On sounding skates a thousand different ways,
In circling poise swift is the winds. Thomson.
SKEAN. n. f. [Irish and Erse; razene, Saxon.] A short sword; a knife.
Any disposed to do mischief may under his mantle pivotally carry his head piece, skan, or pistol, to be always ready.
The Irish did not fail in courage or fierceness, but being only armed with darts and skenes, it was rather an execution than a fight upon them. Bacon's Henry VII.

SKEL. n. f. A wild plum.
SKELGER. n. f.
Little salmon, called skelgers, are bred of such sick salmon that might not go to the sea; and though they abound, yet never thrive to any bigness. Walton's Angler.
SKELTON. n. f. [from skelton, Greek.]
1. [In anatomy.] The bones of the body preserved together as much as can be in their natural situation.
When rattling bones together fly,
From the four corners of the sky;
When sinews o'er the skelton are spread,
Those cloth'd with flesh, and life inspires the dead. Dryden.
Though the patient may from other causes be exceedingly emaciated, and appear as a ghastly skelton, covered only with a dry skin, yet nothing but the ruin and destruction of the lungs denominates a consumption. Blackmore.
I thought to meet, as late as heav'n might grant, A skelton, ferocious, tall, and gaunt, Whose loose teeth in their naked sockets shook,
And grin'd terrific, a Sardonian look. Harte.
2. The compages of the principal parts.
The great structure itself, and its great integrals, the heavenly and elementary bodies, are framed in such a position and situation, the great skelton of the world. Hale.
The schemes of any of the arts or sciences may be analyzed in a sort of skelton, and represented upon tables, with the various dependencies of their several parts. Watts.
SKELLUM. n. f. [from skelm, German.] A villain; a scoundrel. Skimmer.
SKEP. n. f. [from scapen, lower Sax. to draw.]

2. In Scotland, the repositories where the bees lay their honey is still called skap.
SKAPTICK. n. f. [from skap, Gr. scap, Fr. One who doubts, or pretends to doubt, of every thing.
Bring the cause unto the bar; whose authority none must disclaim, and lead of all those skap ticks in religion. Decay of Piety.
Survey
Nature's extended face, then skapticks say,
In this wide field of wonders can you find
No art? Blackmore.
With too much knowledge for the skaptick's side,
With too much weakness for the skaptick's pride,
Man hangs between. Pope's Essay on Man.
The dignatist is sure of every thing, and the skaptick believes nothing. Watts's Logic.
SKAPTICAL. adj. [from skaptick.] Doubtful; pretending to universal doubt.
May the Father of mercies confound the skaptical and wavering minds, and so prevent us, that stand fast, in all our doings, and further us with his continual help. Bentley.
SKAPTICISM. n. f. [from skaptick, Fr. from skaptick.] Universal doubt; pretence or profession of universal doubt.
I laid by my natural diffidence and skapticism for a while, to take up that dogmatick way. Dryden.
SKETCH. n. f. [from sketch, Lat.] An outline; a rough draught; a first plan.
I shall not attempt a character of his present majesty, having already given an imperfect sketch of it. Addison.
As the light sketch, if justly trac'd,
Is by ill colouring but the more disgrac'd,
So by false learning is good sense defac'd. Pope.
TO SKETCH. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To draw, by tracing the outline.
If a picture is daubed with many glaring colours, the vulgar eye admires it; whereas he judges very contemptuously of some admirable design *sketch*ed out only with a black pencil, though by the hand of Raphael. Watts's Logic.

2. To plan, by giving the first or principal notion.
The reader I'll leave in the midst of silence, to contemplate those ideas which I have only sketch-ed, and which every man must finish for himself. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
SKEWER. n. f. [from skere, Danish.] A wooden or iron pin, used to keep meat in form.
Sweetbreads and collops were with skewers pick'd about the sides. Dryden's Hind.
I once may overlook
A skewer sent to table by my cook. Kings.
From his rug the skewer he takes,
And on the stick ten equal notches makes. Swift.
Send up meat well stuck with skewers, to make it look round; and an iron skewer, when rightly employed, will make it look handfomer. Swift's Directions to the Cook.
TO SKEWER. v. a. [from the noun.] To fasten with skewers.
SKIFF. n. f. [from scapha, Lat.] A small light boat.
If in two skiffs of cork a loadstone and steel be placed within the orb of their activities, the one doth not move, the other standing still; but both steer into each other. Brown.
In a poor skiff he pass'd the bloody main,
Chock'd with the slaughter'd bodies of his train. Dryden.
On Gairway cliffs
A savage race, by shipwreck fed,
Lie waiting for the founder'd skiffs,
And strip the bodies of the dead. Swift.
SKILLFUL. adj. [from skill and full.] Knowing; qualified with skill; possessing any art; dexterous; able. It is, in the following examples, used with of, at, and in, before the subject of skill. Of seems poetical, at ludicrous, in popular and proper.
His father was a man of Tyre, skillful to work in gold and silver. 2 Chron. ii. 14.
They shall call the husbandman to mourning, and such as are skillful of lamentation, to wailing. Amos, v. 16.
Will Vasei is skillful at finding out the ridiculous side of a thing, and placing it in a new light. Tass.
Say, Stella, feel you no content,
Reflecting on a life well spent?
Your skillful hand employ'd to save Despairing wretches from the grave:
And then supporting with your store
Those whom you dragg'd from death before. Swift.
Instructors should not only be skillful in those sciences which they teach; but have skill in the method of teaching, and patience in the practice. Watts on the Mind.
SKILLFULLY. adv. [from skillful.] With skill; with art; with uncommon ability; dexterously.
As soon as he came near me, in fit distance, with much fury, but with fury skillfully guided, he ran upon me. Johnson.
Ulysses builds a ship with his own hands, as skillfully as a shipwright. Johnson.
SKILLFULNESS. n. f. [from skillful.] Art; ability; dexterity.
He led them according to the integrity of his heart, and guided them by the skillfulness of his hands. Psalms lxxviii. 72.
SKILL. n. f. [from skill, Islandick.]
1. Knowledge of an art, practice or art; readiness in any practice, knowledge; dexterity; artfulness.
Skill in the weapon is nothing without fact. Shakspeare.

S K

Was not Israel a denision unto thee? Was he found

His majesty encouraged his subjects to make mouths at their betters, and afterwards skewer them from punishment.

The scales, of which the leaf skin is composed, are designed to fence the orifices of the secretory ducts of the military glands, and to skewer the nerves from external injuries.

SKUR. adj. [Of this word there is found no satisfactory derivation.] Oblique; sidelong. It is most used in the adverb askur.

Several have imagined that this skur posture of the axis is a most unfortunate thing; and that if the pole had been erect to the plane of the ecliptic, all mankind would have enjoyed a very paradise.

To SKULK. v. n. To hide; to lurk in fear or malice.

Discover'd, and defeated of your prey,
You skulk'd behind the fence, and sneak'd away.

While publick good aloft in pomp they wield,
And private interest skulks behind the shield.

SKULL. n. f. [Skulla, Islandick; skatti, Islandick, a head.]

1. The bone that incloses the head; it is made up of several pieces, which, being joined together, form a considerable cavity, which contains the brain as in a box, and it is proportionate to the bigness of the brain.

Some lay in dead men's skulls; and in those holes
Where eyes did once inhabit, there were crept,
As 'twere in scorn of eyes, reflecting beams.

With redoubled strokes he plies his head;
But drives the batter'd skull within the brains.

2. [people, Saxon, a company.] A shoal.
See SCULI.

Repair to the river, where you have seen them
Swim in skulls or shoals.

SKY. n. f. [ky, Danish.]

1. The region which surrounds this earth beyond the atmosphere. It is taken for the whole region without the earth.

The mountains their broad backs upheave
Into the clouds, their tops ascend the sky.

The noise of Argos, who with frantic cries,
And imitated howlings, fill'd the skies.

Raid all thy winds, with night involve the skies.

2. The heavens.

The thunderer's bolts, you know,
Sky planted, batters all abelling coasts.

What is this knowledge but the sky stol'n fire,
For which the steel still chain'd in ice doth sit?

Wide is the fronting gate, and, rais'd on high,
With adamant columns thrats the sky.

3. The weather; the climate.

Thou wert better in thy grave, than to answer
With thy uncovered body this extremity of the skies.

We envy not the water or chime, that lies
In ten degrees of more or less skies.

Not at the easiness of our skies in repine,
Though o'er our heads the seven skies shine.

SKY'EV. adj. [from sky. Not very elegantly formed.] Ethereal.

A breath thou art,
That do this habit in, where thou keep'st,
Hourly afflicts.

SKY'COLOUR. n. f. [ky and colour.] An azure colour; the colour of the sky.

A solution as clear as water, with only a light touch of sky-colour, but nothing near so high as the curious tincture of silver.

SKY'COLOURED. adj. [ky and colour.] Blue; azure; like the sky.

This your Ovid himself has hinted, when he tells us that the blue water-nymphs are dressed in sky-coloured garments.

SKY'DYED. adj. [ky and dye.] Coloured like the sky.

There figs, sky'dyed, a purple hue disclose.

SKY'ED. adj. [from sky.] Enveloped by the skies. This is unauthorized and inelegant.

The pale deluge floats
O'er the sky'd mountain to the shadowy vale.

SKY'ISH. adj. [from sky.] Coloured by the ether; approaching the sky.

Or thus flat a mountain you have made,
T' o'erstop old Pelion, or the skyish head
Of blue Olympus.

SKY'LARK. n. f. [ky and lark.] A lark that mounts and sings.

He next proceeded to the sky-lark, mounting up by a proper scale of notes, and afterwards falling to the ground with a very easy descent.

3. To abate.

Whence these raging fires
Will slacken, if his breath stir not their flames.

4. To languish; to fail; to flag.

To SLACK. v. a.

To SLACKEN. v. a.

1. To loosen; to make less tight.

Ah! generous youth, that wilt forbear;
Slack all thy sail, and tear to come.

Had Ajax been employ'd, our slacken'd sails
Had still at Aulis waited happy gales.

2. To relax; to remit.

This makes the pulses beat, and lungs respire;
This holds the sinews like a bundle's arms;
And makes the body to advance, retire,
To turn, or stop, as she them *slack*s or strains.

3. To ease; to mitigate.

Taught power's due use to people and to kings,
Taught not to slack nor strain its tender strings.

4. To ease; to mitigate.

Men, having been brought up at home under a strict rule of duty, always restrained by sharp penalties from lewd behaviour, so soon as they come thither, where they see laws more slackly tended, and the hard restraint which they were used unto now slack'd, they grow more loose.

If there be cure or charm
To respite, or deceive, or slack the pain
Of this ill mansion.

On our account has Jove,
Indulgent, to all, moons some lucculent plant
Allow'd, that poor helpless man might slack
His pient thirst, and matter find for toil.

5. To remit for want of eagerness.

Are you, great powers, and the unbated strength
Of a firm confidence; which shall arm each step
Ta'en for the state, and teach me slack no pace.

With such delay well pleas'd, they slack their course.

6. To cause to be remitted; to make to abate.

My guards
Are you, great powers, and the unbated strength
Of a firm confidence; which shall arm each step
Ta'en for the state, and teach me slack no pace.

Ben Jonson.

With such delay well pleas'd, they slack their course.

7. To cause to be remitted; to make to abate.

8. To cause to be remitted; to make to abate.

10. To cause to be remitted; to make to abate.

11. To cause to be remitted; to make to abate.

12. To cause to be remitted; to make to abate.

You may sooner by imagination quicken or slack a motion, than raise or cease it; as it is easier to make a dog go slower than make him stand still.

Bacon.

This doctrine must supersede and slacken all industry and endeavour, which is the lowest degree of that which hath been promised to be accepted by Christ; and leave nothing to us to deliberate or attempt, but only to obey our fate.

Hammond.

Exult not riches then, the toll of fools,
The wise man's cumbance, if not snare; more apt
To slacken virtue, and abate her edge,
Than prompt her to do aught may merit praise.

Milton.

Balls of this metal slack'd Atlanta's pace,
And on the am'rous youth bestow'd the race.

Waller.

One conduces to the poet's aim, which he is driving on in every line: the other slackens his pace, and diverts him from his way.

Dryden.

6. To relieve; to unbend.

Here have I seen the king, when great affairs
Gave leave to slacken and unbend his cares,
Attended to the chase by all the flow'r
Of youth, whose hopes a nobler prey devour.

Denham.

7. To withhold; to use less liberally.

He that so generally is good, must of necessity hold his virtue to you, whose worthiness would stir it up where it wanted, rather than slack it where there is such abundance.

Shakespeare.

8. To crumble; to deprive of the power of cohesion.

Some undacked lime cover with ashes, and let it stand till rain comes to slack the lime; then spread them together.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

9. To neglect.

Why mi, hi not you, my lord, receive attendance
From those that she calls servants, or from mine?
If then they chanc'd to slack ye,
We could controul them.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

This good chance, that thus much favour'd, he slack not.
Slack not the good presage, while heav'n inspires
Our minds to dare, and gives the ready fires.

Dryden.

10. To repress; to make less quick or forcible.

I should be griev'd, young prince, to think my presence

Unbrat your thoughts, and slacken'd 'em to arms.

Addison.

SLACK. n. f. [from the verb To slack.]

Small coal; coal broken in small parts: as slack'd lime turns to powder.

SLACKLY. adv. [from slack.]

1. Loosely; not tightly; not closely.

2. Negligently; remissly.

That a king's children should be so convey'd,
So slackly guarded, and the search so slow

That could not trace them.

Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

SLACKNESS. n. f. [from slack.]

1. Looseness; not tightness.

2. Negligence; inattention; remissness.

It concerneth the duty of the church by law to provide, that the looseness and slackness of men may not cause the commandments of God to be unexecuted.

Hucker.

These thy offices,
So rarely kind, are as interpreters
Of my behind-hand slackness. Shak. Winter's Tale.
From man's effeminate slackness it begins,
Who should better hold his place
By wisdom, and superior gifts receiv'd.

Milton's Paradise Lost

3. Want of tendency.

When they have no disposition to shoot out above their lips, there is a slackness to heal, and a cure very difficultly effected.

Swaine's Surgery.

4. Weakness; not force; not intention.

Through the slackness of motion, or long banishment from the air, it might gather some aptness to putrefy.

Brerewood.

SLAG. n. f. The dross or recrement of metal.

Not only the calces but the glasses of metal may be of differing colours from the natural colour of the metal, as I have observed about the glass or slag of copper.

Boyle.

SLAKE. n. f. A weaver's reed. Ansforth.

SLAIN. The participle passive of slay.

The slain of the Lord shall be many.

Isaiah, lvi. 16.

The king grew vain,
Fought all his battles o'er again;
And thrice he routed all his foes, and thrice he slew the slain.

Dryden.

To SLAKE. v. a. [from slack, Skinner; from slack, Islandick, to quench, Mr. Lys.]

1. To quench; to extinguish.

He did always strive Himself with selves to health for to restore,
And slake the heavenly fire that rag'd evermore.

Spenser.

If I digg'd up thy forefathers graves,
And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,
It could not slake mine ire, nor ease my heart.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

She with her cold hand slakes
His spirits, the sparks of life, and chills his heart.

Craffau.

From Lulus' head
A lambent flame arise, which gently spread Around his brows, and on his temples fed:
Amaz'd, with running water we prepare
To quench the sacred fire, and slake his hair.

Dryden.

The fragrant fruit from bending branches shake.
And with the chrysal stream their thirst at pleasure slake.

Blackmore's Urason

Coarse are his meals, the fortune of the chase;
Amidst the running stream he slakes his thirst.

Addison's Cato.

2. It is used of lime: so that it is uncertain whether the original notion of To slack or slake lime, be to powder or quench it.

That which he saw happened to be fresh lime, and gathered before any rain had talken to slake it.

Woodward.

To SLAKE. v. n. [This is apparently from slack.]

1. To grow less tense; to be relaxed.

If the body's nature did partake,
Her strength would with the body's strength decay;
But when the body's strongest knew slack,
Then is the soul most active, quick, and gay.

Davies.

2. To go out; to be extinguished.

She perceiving that his flame did slake,
And lov'd her only for his trophy's sake.

Brown.

To SLANDER. v. a. [eslandrie, Fr. scandalum, Latin.] To censure falsely; to belie.

Slander Valentine
With falsehood, cowardice, and poor descent.

Shakespeare.

He hath slandered thy servant unto the king.

2 Sam. xix. 27.

Give me leave to speak as earnestly in truly commending it, as you have done in untruly and unkindly d. facing and slandering it.

Wright.

Thou dost with lies the throne invade,
By practice burden'd in thy slandering trade;
Obtruding heav'n for what'er ill befall,
And spitting under specious names they gall.

Dryden.

Of all her dears she never slander'd a one,
But cares not if a thousand are undone.

Pope.

SLANDER. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. False invective.

When slanders do not live in tongues;
When cut-purges come not to throats.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

Since that, we hear he is in arms,
We think not for;
Yet charge the consul with our harms,
That let him go!

So in our censure of the state
We still do wander,
And make the careful magistrate

The mark of slander. B. Jonson's Catiline.
We are not to be deflected by the slanders and calumnies of bad men, because our integrity shall then be cleared by him who cannot err in judgment.

Nejlon.

2. Disgrace; reproach.

Thou slander of thy heavy mother's womb!
Thou leath'd issue of thy father's loins.

Shakespeare's Richard III.

3. Disreputation; ill name.

You shall not find me, daughter,
After the slander of most detum'ts,
Ill-eyed unto you.

Shakespeare.

SLANDERER. n. f. [from slander.] One who belies another; one who lays false imputations on another.

In your servants suffer any offence against yourself rather than against God: endure not that they should be railers or slanderers, tale-bearers or sowers of division.

Taylor.

Thou shalt answer for this, thou slanderer! Dryd.

SLANDEROUS. adj. [from slander.]

1. Uttering reproachful falsehoods.

What king so strong
Can tie the gall up in the slanderous tongue - Slak.

To me belongs

The care to shun the blast of slanderous tongues;
Let malice, prone the virtue to defame,
Thus with vile censure rant my spotless name.

Pope.

2. Containing reproachful falsehoods; calumnious.

I was never able till now to choke the mouth of such detractors with the certain knowledge of their slanderous untruths.

Spenser on Ireland.

We lay these honours on this man,
To ease ourselves of diren slanderous loads.

Shakespeare's Julius Caesar

As by flattery a man opens his bosom to his mortal enemy, so by detraction and a slanderous misreport he shuts the same to his best friends.

South.

SLANDEROUSLY. adv. [from slanderous.]

Calumniously; with false reproach.

I may the better satisfy them who object these doubts, and slanderously bark at the courtes which are held against that traitorous earl and his adherents.

Spenser on Ireland.

They did slanderously object,
How that they durst not hazard to present
In person their defences.

Daniel's Civil War.

SLANTING. } pent, Dutch. Skinner.]

Oblique; not direct; not perpendicular.

Late the cloud
Jussling, or push'd with wind, rode in their shock,
Tine one slant lightning; whose thwart flame driv'n down

Kindles the gummy bark of oak and pine.

Milton.

Around the globe describes the equator line;
By which we measure he can the whole survey,
With a direct or with a slanting ray,
In the succession of a night and day.

Plattmore.

SLANTLY. } adv. [from slant.]

SLANTWISE. } liquely; not perpendicu-

larly; slope.

Some

Some maketh a hollow; is half a foot deep,
With fewer lets in it, for flap is deep. Taylor
SLAP. v. f. [flap, German.] A blow Properly with the hand open, or with something rather broad than sharp.

The lough, the flap, the second curle go round.
Thomp. n.

SLAP. adv. [from the noun.] With a sudden and violent blow.

They were come to the door, and if they offered to come into the house, then straight went the yard flap over their heads.

John Bull.

To SLAP. v. a. [from the noun.] To strike with a flap.

Duke, who thus long had passive sit,
Here strook'd his chin, and cock'd his hat;
Then flap'd his hand upon the board,
And toud the youth put in his word. Prior.

SLAPDASH. interj. [from flap and dash.] All at once; as any thing broad falls with a flap into the water, and dashes it about. A low word.

And yet, flapdash, is all again

In every know, taste, and view. Prior.

To SLASH. v. a. [slay, to strike, Island-
ick.]

1. To cut; to cut with long cuts.

2. To lash. Slash is improper.

Danily a sprightly team, that u'd to slash
The vigorous steeds that drew his lord's calash,
To Peggy's side inclind. Kir.

To SLASH. v. n. To strike at random with a sword; to lay about him.

The knights with their bright burning blades
Broke their rude troops, and order did confound, Hewing and slashing at their idle round. Henry R.

Not that I'd lop the beauties from his cheek,
Like slashing Remley with his despoil'd hook. Pope.

SLASH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Cut; wound.

Some few received some cuts and slashes that had drawn blood. Clarendon.

2. A cut in cloth.

What! this a sleeve?

Here's nip and nip, and cut, and slit and slash,
Like to a cut for in a barber's shop. Shakespeare.

Distinguish'd slash a deck the great:

A sea horse's in birth of state,

His oylet holes are more and ampler;

The king's own body was a sampler. Prior.

SLATCH. n. f. (a fen term.) The middle part of a rope or cable that hangs down loose. Barley.

SLAT. n. f. [from slat, slat is in some counties a crack; or from eschute, a tile, French.] A grey stone, easily broken into thin plates, which are used to cover houses, or to write upon.

A square cannot be truly drawn upon a slat,
as it is corrupted in the mark. Greav's Cynique.

A small piece of a slat plate the ants find over the hole of their nest, when they tinsaw it would win. Adams's Spectator.

To SLAT. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover the roof; to tile.

Sornets and tiles to Chlois,

Would raise a house about two floors,

A lyric ode would raise. See f.

SLAT. n. f. [from slat.] One who covers with slates or tiles.

SLATERN. n. f. [slat, Swedil.] A woman negligent, not elegant or nice.

Without the raising of which sum,

How do we not be in trouble some

To pinch the slattern black and blue,

For leaving you their work as due. Hudibras.

We may always observe, that a gossip in politics is a slattern in a family. Addis. Rambler.

The fallow skin is for the swarthy put,
And love can make a slattern of a slut. Dryden.
Beneath the lamp her tawdry ribbands glare,
The new-fur'd manteau, and the slattern air. Gay.

SLATY. adj. [from slate.] Having the nature of slate.

All the stone that is slaty, with a texture long, and parallel to the site of the stratum, will split only lengthways, or horizontally; and, if placed in any other position, 'tis apt to give way, slat, and burst, when any considerable weight is laid upon it.

Woodward on Puffin.

SLAVE. n. f. [esclave, French.] It is said to have its original from the Slavi, or Sclavians, subdued and sold by the Li-netians.]

1. One mancipated to a master; not a freeman; a dependant.

The banish'd Kent, who in disguise
Follow'd his enemy king, and did him service Improper for a slave. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Thou elvish mask, abortive, rooting hog!

Thou that wilt hold in thy nativity

The slave of nature, and the fun of hell.

Shakespeare's Richard III.

Of guests we must be slaves Milton.

Inhospitality.

The condition of servants was different from what it is now, they were generally slaves, and such as were bought and sold for money. South.

Perfection a punier most not want, yet without setting ourselves wholly to it, as to become slaves of it. Dryden.

To-morrow, should we thus express our friendship,

Each might receive a slave into his arms.

Thou shalt, alas, this morning die, 'tis the last

That ever shall see on Roman liberty. Addis's Cato.

2. One that has lost the power of resistance.

Slaves to our passions we become, and then

It grows impossible to govern us. Haller.

When once men are immersed in sensual things, and are become slaves to their passions and lusts, then are they most disposed to doubt of the existence of God. Watts.

3. It is used proverbially for the lowest state of life.

Power shall not exempt the kings of the earth, and the great in power shall meanly exult
the point. Nelson.

To SLAT. n. [from the noun.] To drudge; to toil; to toil.

Had women been the makers of our laws,

The men should slat at candles from morn to night.

Swift.

SLAVER. n. f. [salva, Latin; slava, Islandick.] Spittle running from the mouth; drivell.

Mathias has a passage, that a toad communicates its venom not only by urine, but by the humidity and slaver of its mouth, which will not confess with truth. Brown.

Of all mad creatures, if the learn'd are right,

It is the slaver kills, and not the bite. Pope.

To SLAVER. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To be smeared with spittle.

Slaver with lips as common as the stairs
That mount the capitol; join grapes with hands
Made hard with hourly falsehood as with labour.

Shakespeare.

2. To emit spittle.

Miso came with scowling eyes to deliver a slaver- ing good-morrow to the two ladies. Sidney.

Why must he sputter, spawl, and slaver it,

In vain, against the people's favourite? Swift.

To SLAVER. v. a. To smear with drivell.

Twit h'd by the slave, he mouths it more and
more,

Till with white froth his gow is slav'd o'er.

Dryden.

SLAVERER. n. f. [slabbaerd, Dutch; from slaver.] One who cannot hold his spittle; a driveller; an idiot.

SLAVERY. n. f. [from slave.] Servitude;
the condition of a slave; the offices of a slave.

If my dissentings were out of error, weakness, or obstinacy, yet no man can think it other than the badge of slavery, by savage rudeness and importuous obtrusions of violence to have the mist of his error dispelled. King Charles.

SLAUGHTER. n. f. [onplauge, Saxon, from slagan, slagan, to strike or kill.]
Massacre; destruction by the sword.

Sintul Macduff,

They were all struck for thee!

Not for their own demerits, but for mine.

Fell slaughter on their souls. Shake's Macbeth.

On each hand slaughter and gigantic death. Milton.

The pair you see,

Now friends below, in close embraces join;

But, when they leave the study realms of night,

With mortal hate each other shall pursue:

What wars, what wounds, what slaughter shall ensue!

Dryden.

To SLAUGHTER. v. a. [from the noun.]
To massacre; to slay; to kill with the sword.

Your castle is surpris'd, your wife and babes

Savagely slaughter'd. Shakespeare's Alz. Cor.

SLAUGHTERHOUSE. n. f. [slaughter and house.] House in which beasts are killed for the butcher.

Away with me, all you whose souls abhor

Th' uncleanly favour of a slaughter-house!

For I am filled with the smell of sin. Shakespeare.

SLAUGHTERMAN. n. f. [slaughter and man.] One employed in killing.

The mad ravens with their howls confus'd

Do break the clouds; as did the wives of Jewry,

At Herod's bloody hunting slaughter men. Shakespeare's Henry V.

Ten chas'd by one,

Are now each one the slaughterman of twenty.

Shakespeare.

See, thou fight'st against thy countrymen,

And join't with them with be thy slaughtermen.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

SLAUGHTEROUS. adj. [from slaughter.]

Destructive; murderous.

I have slept till with honours;

Directly I am to my slaughterous thoughts

Cannot once start me. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

SLAVISH. adj. [from slave.] Servile;

mean; base; dependant.

A thing

More slavish did I never, than answering

A slave without a knock. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

You have among you many a purchased slave,

Which, like your asses, and your dogs and mules,

You use in abject and in slavish part,

Because you bought them. Shakespeare's Henry V.

The supreme God, whom all things ill

Are but as slavish officers of vengeance,

Would find a gisting quarrel, if need were,

To keep my life and honour unassail'd. Milton.

Thou art the labour'd unto of slavish brains,

Not the effect of poetry, but pains. Denham.

Slavish hands our mutual loves rebarbe

In lying flames and ignominious veils. Prior.

SLAVISHLY. adv. [from slavish] Servilely; meanly.

SLAVISHNESS. n. f. [from slavish] Servility; meanness.

To SLAY. v. a. preter slaw; part. pass.

slain. [slakan, Gothick; slagan, Saxon;

slachten, Dutch, to strike.] To kill; to butcher; to put to death. Her

Her father's brother
Would be her lord; or shall I say her uncle?
Or he that flew her brothers and her uncle?

Shakespeare's Richard III.

Tyrant, show thy face:
If thou be'st slain, and with no stroke of mine,
My Wife and children's ghosts will haunt me still.

Shakespeare.

I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God.

Rev. vi. 2.

Slay and make ready.
Wrath killeth the foolish man, and envy slayeth
the silly one.

Job, v. 2.

Of Troy in chiefs he view'd a numerous train;
All much lamented, all so battle slain.
He m'nt, blood and batt'ry pow'r maintain,
And slay the monarchs ere he rule the plains.

Prior.

SLAY'ER. n. s. [from slay.] Killer; mur-derer; destroyer.

With the guiltless blood pour'd oft on ground;
The crowned often slain, the slayer crown'd.

Fairy Queen.

Thy slay those that were slayers of their countrymen.

Abb.

The slayer of himself ye saw I there;
The gore congeal'd was clotted in his hair;
With eyes half-closed and sapping much he lay,
And grim as when he breath'd his fallen soul away.

Dryden.

SLAVE. n. s. [Of this word I know not well the meaning. Slave still is explained by Gouldman, flaves, flavas, a lock of silk; and the women still say, flaves the silk, for untwist it. Alphonso calls a weaver's shuttle or reel a flap. To slay is to part a twist into single fibres.

I on a mountain height,

Whose brim with pink and white was plac'd;

The bank was as a velvet light

With grass like flaves was mat'd.

Dryden's Cynthia.

SLAZY. adj. [often written slazy.] Weak; wanting substance. This seems to be of the same race with flave, or from To flay.

SLED. n. s. [slad, Danish; slide, Dutch.]
A carriage drawn without wheels.

The sled, the toboggan, harrales, and the sled,
Thel' all n'nt to people's aid.

Dryden.

SLE'DGED. adj. [from slid.] Mounted on a sled.

So fro'nd he once when in an angry pirl,
He smote the sled'd Polack on the ice.

Shakspeare.

SLENDER. n. s. [pleeg, Saxon; fleggin, Hollandic.]

1. A large heavy hammer.

They him tpying, both with greedy force
At once upon him ran, and him beset
With strokes of mortal steel, without remorse,
And on his shield like iron sleds bet.

Fairy Queen.

The painful smith, with force of sixteen best,
The sled in iron doth mollify;

That with his heavy sled he can it heat,
And fashion to what he it bid apply.

Spenser.

The upland sled is used by under workmen, when the work is not of the largest, yet requires help to batter and draw it out. they use it with both their hands before them, and seldom lift then hammer higher than their head.

Milton.

It would follow that the quick stroke of a light hammer should be of greater efficacy than any softer and more gentle striking of a great sled.

2. A carriage without wheels, or with very low wheels: properly a sled. See SLED.

In Lappish they use a sort of sled made with thick wheels, to bring their mail out, drawn with one horse.

Marmion's Husbandry.

SLEEK. n. s. [slaych, Dutch.]

1. Smooth; nitid; glossy.

Let me have men about me that are fat,
Sleek shod men, and such a slipshod night.

How eagerly ye follow my disgrace,
As if it fed ye; and how sleek and watchful

Ye appear in every thing may bring my ruin. Sleek
What time the groves were clad in green,

The fields all dress'd in flowers,
And that the sleek-hair'd nymphs were seen

To seek them summer bowers. Sleek
As in gaze admiring, oft he bow'd

His torret crest, and sleek enamell'd neck, Fawning. Sleek

Thy head and hair are sleek,
And then thou k'ndst the tuzzes on thy cheek.

So sleek her skin, so faultless was her make,
For Juno did unwilling pleasure take

To be so fair a rival. Sleek
2. Not rough; not harsh.

These rugged names to our like months grow sleek,
That would have made Quenonian flares and grip.

To SLEEK. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To comb smooth and even.

Yet are the men more look: than they,
Muckemb'd, and both'd, and rubb'd, and trimm'd.

More sleek'd, more lost, and slicker limb'd. Sleek
By dead Parthenope's dear tomb,

And fair Liget's golden comb,
Wherewith the fits on diamond rocks

Sleeking her soft alluring locks. Sleek
2. To render soft, smooth, or glossy.

Gentle as a bird, sleek o'er your rugged looks;
Be bright and jovial among your guests to-night.

She dies sleek
With crumbs of bread and milk, and has a night's
In her hair gloves.

The persuasive rhetoric
That sleek'd his tongue, and won to much on I've,
So little here, my loss.

A sheet of well sleek'd marble paper did not cast any of its distinct colors upon the wall.

A cruise of fragrant form'd of barmish
Odour divine! whose look's trailing the air

Sleek the smooth skin, and scent the snowy limbs.

SLEEK'LY, adv. [from sleek.] Smoothly;
glossily.

Let their heads be sleekly comb'd, and their hair combed sleek. Sleek

SLEEKSTONE. n. s. [sleek and stone.] A smoothing stone.

The pulpit rail cover'd with a sleek stone rub from the moss even as you are.

To SLEEK. v. n. [slaych, Dutch; sleepen,
Saxon; slapen, Dutch.]

1. To take rest, by suspension of the mental and corporal powers.

I've watch'd and travel'd long;
Sometime I sleep out, though I sleep not.

Where's Polio?—go you, and where you find a maid,

That, are the sleep, hith there her plays said,
Run up the rigors of her fantasy;

She's as no sound as careless infancy;
but that that sleep, and think not on their sins,

Pinch them, arms, legs, backs, shoulders, sides, and thins.

If the man be poor, thou shalt not sleep with his pledge.

Peace, good reader! do not weep;
For the lovers are asleep;

They, sweet turtles! folded lie
In the last knot that love could tie.

I let them sleep, let them sleep on,
Till this sunny night be gone,

And to eternal morrow dawn;
Then the curtains will be drawn,

And they waken with that light
Whole day that fever sleep in night.

Those who at any time sleep without dreaming, can never be convinced that their thoughts are for four hours busy without their knowing it.

2. To rest; to be motionless.

Steel, if thou turn thine edge, or cut not out the burly-boned clowns in chins of beef ere thou sleep in thy sheath, I beseech Jove on my knees thou mayest be turned into hobnails.

How sweet the moonlight sleeps upon the bank!
Here will we sit, and let the sounds of music

Croop in our ears. Sleek
The giddy ship, between the winds and tides
For'd back and forward, in a circle ride;

Stun'd with the blast of blows, then floats again,
To counterblast the top, and the pragains.

3. To live thoughtlessly

We sleep over our happiness, and want to be roust'd into a quick thankful sense of it.

4. To be dead: death being a state from which man will some time awake.

It we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even to them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him.

A person is said to be dead to us, because we cannot rise from the grave, though he on a sleep unto God, who can take him from the chamber of death.

5. To be inattentive; not vigilant.

Heaven will one day open
The king's eyes, that so long have slept up on This bold, bad man.

6. To be unnoticed, or unattended.

Have with'd the sleeping of this business, never Desir'd it to be slain.

SLEEP. n. s. [from the verb.] Repose; rest; suspension of the mental and corporal powers; slumber.

Macbeth doth murder sleep, the innocent sleep;
Sleep, that knaves up to the collar'd neck of one;

The birth of each day's life, fore without a bath,
Balm of hurt minds, great nature's second course,

Chief nourisher in life's feast. Sleek
That sleep might twofold use
His careful eye, he enter'd, and in his bed

In silence took.

Cold collect the spirits to succour, and therefore they cannot so well close, and go together on the head, which is ever requisite to sleep.

And, for the same cause, pain and noise hinder sleep;
and causes much sleep.

Beasts that sleep in winter, as wild bears, during their sleep was very fat, though they eat nothing.

His fastid'ous hands the slender keep,
And, fixed on his face, his eyelids yawning sleep.

Hermes o'er his head in air appear'd.
His hat adorn'd with wings dropp'd the god.

And in his hand a sleep compelling rod.
Infants spend the sweetest part of their time in sleep, and are seldom awake but when hunger calls for the teat, or some pain forces the mind to perceive it.

SLEEPER. n. s. [from sleep.]

1. One who sleeps; one who is not awake.

Sound, music; come, my queen, take I and waken me,

And rock the ground whereon the sleepers lie.

What's the business?

That such an ludicrous trumpet calls to notice
The sleepers of the house?

In some countries, a place which shuttles in the night, open in the morning, and of which waste at noon, the inhabitants say is a sign that sleepers there do sleepers know them, for almost all flowers do the like.

Night is indeed the province of his reign;
Yet all his dark exploits no more contain
Than a spy taken, and a sleeper slain.

2. A lazy inactive drone.

He must be no great carter, drinker, nor sleeper, that will outstep his tender, and exact his mind;
every worthy undertaking requires both.

3. That

3. That which lies dormant, or without effect.

Let penal laws, if they have been sleepers of long, or if grown unfit for the present time, be by wise judges confined in the execution. Baron.

4. [exortus.] A fish. Ainsworth.
SLEEPILY. adv. [from sleep.]

1. Drowsily; with desire to sleep.
2. Dully; lazily.

I rather chole to endure the wounds of thoudarts, which envy casteth at novelty, than to go on safely and sleepily in the easy ways of ancient mistakings. Raleigh.

3. Stupidly.

He would make us believe that Luther in these actions pretended to authority, forgetting what he had sleepily owned before. Atterbury.

- SLEEPINESS. n. f. [from sleepy.] Drowsiness; disposition to sleep; inability to keep awake.

Watchfulness precedes too great sleepiness, and is the most ill-boding symptom of a fever. Arbutnot.

- SLEEPLESS. adj. [from sleep.] Wanting sleep.

The field
To labour calls us, now with sweat impos'd,
'T' though after sleepless night. Milton's Par. Lost.

While pensive poets painful vigils keep,
Sleepless themselves to give their readers sleep. Pope.

- SLEEPY. adj. [from sleep.]
1. Drowsy; disposed to sleep.
2. Not awake.

Why did you bring these daggers from the place?
They must be there. Go, carry them, and smear
The sleepy fountains with blood. Shakep. Macbeth.

She wak'd her sleepy crew,
And, rising hasty, took a shout adieu. Dryden.

3. Soporiferous; somniferous; causing sleep.

We will give you sleepy drinks, that your senses, unattending at our insinuation, may, though they cannot praise us, as little accuse us.

Let such bethink them, if the sleepy drench
Of that forgetful lake benumb not still. Milton.

I slept about eight hours, and no wonder, for the physicians had mingled a sleepy potion in the wine. Gulliver.

- SLEET. n. f. [perhaps from the Danish slæt.] A kind of smooth small hail or snow, not falling in flakes, but single particles.

Now can to van the foremost squadrons meet,
The midmost battles huffing up behind,
Who view, far off, the storm of falling sleet,
And hear their thunder rattling in the wind. Dryd.

Perpetual sleet and driving snow
Obscure the skies, and hang on heids below:
Huge oxen stand inclos'd in wintry walls
Of snow congel'd. Dryden.

Rain would have been poured down, as the vapours became cooler; next sleet, then snow, and ice. Coke.

- TO SLEET. v. n. [from the noun.] To snow in small particles, intermixed with rain.

- SLEETRY. adj. [from the noun.] Bringing sleet.

- SLEEVE. n. f. [orig. Saxon.]

1. The part of a garment that covers the arms.

Once my well-waiting eyes espied my treasure,
With sleeves turn'd up, loose hair, and breast en-laid. Shak.

Her father's core, moving her faint limbs, measure
Her. Sidney.

The deep smock sleeve, which the Irish women use, they say, was old Spanish, and yet that should seem rather to be an old English fashion: for in ancient, the fashion of the Manche, which is given in arms, being nothing else but a sleeve, is fashioned much like to that sleeve: and knights, in ancient times, used to wear their mistress's or love's sleeve upon their arms. Sir Launcelot wore the sleeve of the fair maid of Astoloth in a tourney. Spenser's Ireland.

Your hose should be ungartered, your sleeve unbuttoned, your shoe untied, demonstrating a careless desolation. Shakespeare.

You would think a smock a she-angel, he so chants to the sleeve band, and the work about the square on't. Shakespeare.

He was clothed in cloth, with wide sleeves and a cape. Bacon.

In velvet white as snow the troop was gown'd,
Their hoods and sleeves the same. Dryden.

2. SLEEVES, in some provinces, signifies a knot or skein of silk, which is by some very probably supposed to be its meaning in the following passage. [See SLEAVE.]

The innocent sleep;
Sleep that knits up the ravell'd sleeves of care. Shak.

3. Sleeve, Dutch, signifies a cover; any thing spread over: which seems to be the sense of sleeve in the proverbial phrase.

A brace of sharpers laugh at the whole roguery in their sleeves. L'Estrange.

Men know themselves utterly void of those qualities which the impudent hypocrite ascribes to them, and in his sleeve laughs at them for believing. South's Sermons.

John laughed heartily in his sleeve at the pride of the squire. Aristotle's History of John Bull.

4. To hang on a sleeve; to make dependent.

It is not for a man which doth know, or should know, what orders, and what practicable government requireth, to ask why we should hang our judgment upon the church's sleeve, and why in matters of orders more than in matters of doctrine. Hooker.

5. [lolligo, Lat.] A fish. Ainsworth.
SLEEVED. adj. [from sleeve.] Having sleeves.

- SLEEVELESS. adj. [from sleeve.]

1. Wanting sleeves; having no sleeves.

His clothes were strange tho' coarse, and black tho' bare;

Sleeveless his jerkin was, and it had been Velvet; but 'twas now, so much ground was seen, Became tuffet-stuff. Donne.

They put on sleeveless coats of home-spun cotton. Sandys.

Behold you idle by palmers, pilgrims trod, Grave mummings! sleeveless some, and thirtles others. Pope.

2. Wanting reasonableness; wanting propriety; wanting solidity. [This sense, of which the word has been long possessed, I know not well how it obtained.
Skinner thinks it properly liveless or lifeless: to this I cannot heartily agree, though I know not what better to suggest. Can it come from sleeve, a knot or skein, and so signify unconnected, hanging all together &c. or from sleeve, a cover, and therefore means plainly absurd, foolish
without palliation &c.]

This sleeveless tale of transubstantiation was brought into the world by that other fable of the multipresence. Idol.

My landlady quarrelled with him for sending every one of her children on a sleeveless errand, as she calls it. Spectator.

- SLEIGHT. n. f. [slag'd, cunning. Islandick.] Artful trick; cunning artifice;
dexterous practice: as, sleight of hand,

the tricks of a juggler. This is often written, but less properly, light.

He that exhorted to beware of an enemy's policy, doth not give counsel to be impolite; but rather to be all prudent foresight, lest our simplicity be over-reached by cunning sleights. Hooker.

Fair Una to the red cross knight

Betrothed is with joy;

Though false sleights do employ. Fairy Queen.

Upon the corner of the moon

There hangs a vaporous drop profound;

I'll catch it ere it come to ground;

And that, distill'd by magic sleights,

Shall raise such artificial lights,

As, by the strength of their illusion,

Shall draw him on to his confusion. Sh. Macb.

Out slept the ample size

Of mighty Ajax, huge in strength; to him, Laertes' son,

That crafty one as huge in sleight. Chapman.

She could not so convey

The massy substance of that idol great;

What sleight had she the wardens to betray?

What strength to heave the goddess from her seat?

Fairfax.

In the wily snake

Whatever sleights, none would suspicious mark,

As from his wit and native subtilty

Proceeding. Milton.

Doubtless the pleasure is as great

Of being cheated, as to cheat;

As lookers on feel most delight,

That less perceive the juggler's sleight. Hudb.

Good humour is but a sleight of hand, or a faculty making truths to look like appearances, or appearances like truths. L'Estrange.

When we hear death related, we are all willing to favour the sleight, when the poet does not too grossly impose upon us. Dryden.

While innocent he learns ignoble sleight,
His honest friends preserve him by a sleight. Swift.

- SLENDER. adj. [slinder, Dutch.]

1. Thin; small in circumference compared with the length; not thick.

So thick the roses bushing round

About her glow'd; half stooping to support

Each flow'r of slender stalk. Milton.

2. Small in the waist; having a fine shape.

What slender youth, bedew'd with liquid odours,

Courts thee on roses in some pleasant cave? Mit.

Beauteous Helen shines among the rest,

Tall, slender, straight, with all the graces blest.

Dryden.

3. Not bulky; slight; not strong.

Love in these labyrinths his slaves detains,

And mighty hearts are held in slender chains. Pope.

4. Small; inconsiderable; weak.

Yet they, who claim the general assent of the whole world unto that which they teach, and do not fear to give very hard and heavy sentence upon as many as refuse to embrace the same, must have special regard, that their first foundations and grounds be more than slender probabilities. Hooker.

Where joy most revels, grief doth most lament;

Grief joys, joy grieves, on slender accident. Shak.

Positively to define that season, there is no slender difficulty. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

It is a very slender comfort that relies upon this nice distinction, between things being troublesome, and being evils; when all the evil of affliction lies in the trouble it creates to us. Tillotson.

5. Sparing; less than enough: as, a slender estate, and slender parts.

At my lodging,

The worst is this, that, at so slender warning,

You're like to have a thin and slender pittance.

Shakespeare.

6. Not amply supplied.

The good Othorus often deign'd

To grace my slender table with his presence. Phil.

In obstructions inflammatory, the aliment ought to be cool, slender, thin, diluting. Arbutnot.

SLID. I

SLIDDERLY, adv. [from slender.]

1. Without bulk.
  2. Slightly; meanly.
- If the debt be not just, we know not what may be deemed just, neither is it a sum to be slenderly regarded. Hayward.
If I have done well, it is that which I desired; but if slenderly and meanly, it is that which I could attain to. Maccabees.

SLENDERNESS, n. f. [from slender.]

1. Thinness; smallness of circumference.
- Small whistles give a sound because of their extreme slenderness, the air is more pent than in a wider pipe. Bacon.
Their colours arise from the thinness of the transparent parts of the feathers; that is, from the slenderness of the very fine hairs or capillamenta, which grow out of the sides of the grosser lateral branches or fibres of those feathers. Newton.
2. Want of bulk or strength.
- It is preceded by a spitting of blood, occasioned by its acrimony, and too great a projectile motion, with slenderness and weakness of the vessels. Arbutnot on Dist.
3. Slightness; weakness; inconsiderableness.
